Guarding Our

English

A proper appraisement of the English language is much needed at the present time when the spoken word over the air is in some measure taking the place of the printed word. The printing press is to be given much credit for standardizing English of the first class. Those responsible for the printed word have E. S. Wigle, who still is District made it a chief concern to conform their speech to the highest standards zine, author or writer with a name departs from these standards.

A great responsibility rests upon those who broadcast the spoken word. Just as we are zealous for printed English At vocabulary and construction, we must have like zeal for the spoken word which is broadcast upon the

The linguistic consequences of an atmosphere surcharged with utterances from broadcasters in all parts of the Empire and of various degrees of culture, cannot be too seriously considered. English is the language of commerce and industry, of civil and religious freedom; of the highest civilization so far known. Let us guard it when it goes out upon the air.
