The next time you have your women friends in, writes Jessie Marie De Both, in the Montreal Star, or the card club or the church circle or the Ladies' Aid is having tea or a luncheor, just coax or lure them into a cake-guessing contest and I'll guarantee you and them more fun flavorings. Bake in 2 nine-inch laywere possible in such a familiar subject as cake.

Every woman prides herself on Butterscotch Pudding. knowing a lot about cake, and that's where the fun begins on the guessing contest. To give you a hint about this guessing game, just pick up your cook book and run through the dex of names. Next, ask yourself what kind of people or persons would you serve this cake to, that cake. the other cake? For example, what kind of cake would you serve to a gardener? To a footba" player? To a mischief maker? To a fat person? To a baby?

You should have enough pencils and paper available so that each woman can write down her answers to the list of questions I am giving you for the cake game. You must set a each woman read her first question in turn, and then when all the answers to the first question have been read aloud, you read the right answer. It is screamingly funny to hear some of the guesses that will be made, and how widely some women differ in their ideas of what kind of cake is called for by the question.

As a reward for the winner, there might be a special cake, and as a consolation prize for the worst guesser there might be a cup cake or some other small item like a cookie. Here are the puzzlers:

Courageous England

(The Chatham News) Sir Philip Gibbs who is a reported

has been wandering about England trying to discover if England still stands where she did. He has written a book in which he gives the interesting result of his investigations. This book "England Speaks" is made up of innumerable conversations-with cabinet members and men on the dole, with jebless shipyard workers and coal miners, with panhandlers on the London streets and tillers of the English soil, with cigarette girls and policemen and night watchmen and collegians and night watchmen and collegians and every other kind of person imaginable; and from these talks Mr. Gibbs has drawn sundry conclusions about the estate of the nation.

The English, he remarks, frequently act in a very un-English way. They are unemotional and reserved, but at the late King George's jubilee they turned loose a veritable flood of sentiment; they are discordant and full of diverse fancies, but in the recent League of Nations crisis they have shown an amazing solidity and unanimity; and as individuals they have not, after all, changed much since Shakespeare's

He deals fully with Englands's troubles, but he comes to the firm conclusion that Englishmen are not discouraged. They still thank God they live in a free country and they carry a big stick for anyone who wants them to live otherwise; and their character is still a good bet to bring survival, and revival, in a world uncommonly full of difficul-
