Impressions of Opening of New Parliament

House of Commons, Ottawa, Feb. 8th, 1936.

A full House gathered the day after the formal opening to pay loving and sorrowful tribute to King George V.

The Prime Minister and Mr. Bennett reviewed the work of the late monarch both as a sovereign and as a man and expressed in the form of a resolution the genuine sorrow which members of the House of Commons feel, which resolution will be forwarded to Queen Mary.

Mr. Woodsworth, Mr. Blackmore, leader of the Social Credit group, and Mrs. Black also made speeches of tribute and condolence. A resolution expressing the loyalty and affection of Canadians was passed and is being forwarded to King Edward VIII.

The opening was quite unlike any other I have seen. Papers in the Capital city carried the heading "Court mourning worn by ladies adds to general colourful note".

And as an explanation of this curious statement: "Black gowns form vivid contrast to uniforms of officers and members of the diplomatic corps, and the purple of the church dignitaries."

If black was mourning for women, why was scarlet and ermine mourning for the judges of the Supreme Court? Why, too, was the gold embroidered Windsor uniform of the Prime Minister an adequate expression of the grief of the first citizen? It was said the judges had "weeping cuffs" and I dare say they had, but from my position at the bar of the Senate I could not see them.

Contrary to the opinion expressed by society writers, I did not think the dominant note of dull black added to the dignity and beauty of the opening pageant. Many women were unable to attend because of the exorbitant cost involved by the requirement of all black clothes. Of the four young ladies who were to have been my guests, not one felt she could purchase a second costume for the occasion. The same problem evidently faced many women, or at any rate that is my explanation of the empty seats on the floor and in the galleries.

The new House met in the forenoon of the 6th to elect a speaker. It was known beforehand that the Government had decided to place the Hon. Pierre C. Sgrain in the Chair and with their enormous majority of 111 or 112, anyone they chose would undoubtedly be Speaker, though in theory the Speaker is chosen by the members of the Commons. Ordinarily the Opposition agrees with the Government choice, making the election of the Speaker a purely formal procedure, but in this case Mr. Bennett and Mr. Woodsworth opposed the selection of Mr. Casgrain as Speaker on the ground that before his appointment he had in a most arbitrary fashion, assumed the duties of Speaker and had exceeded his authority even as such by dismissing some hundred and twenty employees of the House of Commons, some of whom have served for many years.

But after administering a stern rebuke the motion passed 'on division'.

By the length of time it took to read the Speech from the Throne I expected a rather extensive legislative programme, but a later examination of a printed copy of the speech did not reveal much. Parliament will be asked to approve of the Canadian-United States trade treaty and of a national commission on unemployment and relief. The Bank of Canada is to be slightly reorganized giving the Government a larger interest in its ownership; relief camps maintained for single unemployed men are to be closed as soon as conditions permit; amendments to the British North America Act are to be considered and consideration is to be given to new financial relations between the provinces and the Dominion.

Railway legislation will be brought down affording the Government a greater measure of authority in the operation of the Canadian National system.

Though the legislative programme seems short the session is not likely to be. With more than a hundred and fifty new members we are assured of many resolutions and much speaking.

It is a strange looking House with Government members sitting both on the immediate right and the immediate left of the Speaker and the forty Conservatives taking exactly four double rows of seats behind and about Mr. Bennett. The C.C.F. group sits to the left of the Conservatives and the Social Credit group to their left again. Mr. Stevens occupies a front bench on the right of Mr. Woodsworth and I on his left. I would like to have sat between Mr.

Stevens and Mr. Woodsworth but it could not be arranged.

Senator Cairine Wilson gave a small but very enjoyable tea party the day before the House opened, to which Mrs. Black and I were invited. We had a happy hour visiting before the fire in the beautiful drawing room. The Senator had had a birthday the day before and she had saved some of her birthday cake for the tea party. Charlotte Whitton, the recognized authority on child welfare, and Winnifred Kydd, the retiring President of National Council of Women, were two of the interesting and congenial group. It is delightful for me to have Mrs. Black in the House and to find that her office is opposite mine.

Mrs Thos. Allan was called last week to her mother's bedside in Ferguson hospital but reached there too late to see her in life as she died a few hours before her arrival.

The public meeting called for Thursday evening to consider the Memorial to the fallen heroes of the war was poorly attended. A sum of about $3,000 is already secured, the municipalities of Bentinck and Durham have each contributed and we think a canvass of the town and neighborhood should result in placing a sum of $5,000 in the committee's hands.

In a thrilling battle on Durham ice, Monday night, Durham won their second home game in the Senior Northern League, giving Hanover the short end of a 3-5 score. Durham team: goal, J. Allan; defence J. McLachlan and Farrell; centre F. McIlroy; wings, M. Saunders and McNamara; sub. R. Saunders.

The Green Grove eye-openers held their debate on Wednesday evening last. They debated that the license liquor law is more beneficial than local option. The negative side won by one point. Alex Aljoe and Robt. McFadden were speakers for affirmative side, and John McGill and W. Lawrence the negative. Judges were, Misses Annie Scott and Julia Weir, also Robt. Scott. The program was prepared by the boys only: violin selection by W. J. Young, Durham; mouth organ selection by Robt. Aljoe; gramophone selection by Murray Ritchie; solos by W. Patterson and Ernest McGill; duet by E. McGill and John Greenwood; song by the boys; barber scene, two dialogues; recitations by W. Lawrence and A. Heather; also three editorials were read by W. Lawrence, composed by Bella McGill, Maggie McFadden and Maggie Weir.

Fleaherton has withdrawn from the Centre Grey Hockey League, as a result of the League having declared Cyril Proctor, one of their leading players, ineligible, as he had played a game with the Owen Sound Olympians.
