Raising Colts Is No Cinch As Luck Plays A Big Part

(By Rusticus, in the Stratford Beacon-Herald.)

Horses like men, get old. No one would expect an old man to be able as easily as a young man. Nor can we expect an old horse to pull the plow up and down the field with five-year-old. Just as age creeps should be a few good years left in

During the winter one of the older of the number of days that were allotted to him. Two more of the farm horses are getting to be very near the same age, and a day's work tells on them to a far greater extent than it does on the younger animals. At best it will be only a few more years till they, too will have reached the while the mare is out on grass a few end of their period of labor.

On farms where no colts are raised the death of one horse usually means the purchase of another and younger one to take his place. Reasonably sound and typy horses are in good demand and good prices are realized on this class of stock. In theory at least it should be a good policy to raise a few colts to replace the worn out animals. In fact, if colts are regularly raised there ought to be horse to sell every year or so, an none of the animals need be kept until old age weakens and finally kills

Now mind, that is all theory. It doesn't take into account the number of colts that will for some reason or other, not survive those first trying days of colthood. Raising a colt, as to any other class of stock they keep. This spring it was necessary for us to buy another horse. Realizing to keep up his end of the day's work | that in a few more years other horses must be replaced, we decided to find out if raising our own work horses would work out in actual practice as quite the speed and keenness of a attractively as it does in theory. An in-foal mare was therefore purchasupon a man and weakens him long | ed and a week or ten days ago, she ere he is quite ready to admit that presented us with what promises to he is getting old, so age comes to be a fairly good colt. This youngster our horses while we still think there is the first foal to be born on this farm in the last 30 years.

Normally the foal should grow and in two or three years become a valuhorses on the farm came to the end | able work horse. That is according to theory, but theory doesn't take into consideration the diseases and accidents that may be visited upon a farm horse of the youngest generation. Today though she is a playsome colt, that shares the box stall with her mother or gallops round hours each day, up to date the experiment is 100 per cent successful.

> When you buy a horse you can always ask the previous owner what he calls it, for a horse must have a name. With the foal you raise one has the privilege of picking a name. Now a horse does not want a big family name. Something short and easy to say is far more appropriate. Some horses are inclined to be a bit lazy at times and the driver may feel inclined to give them a yell. At such times a short name like "Mike," "Bill" or "Tom" comes in very nice. If the teamster is inclined to do a of "cussing" should one of the plow steam step over the traces, he does not want to be bothered with a "sissified" name.

So here we are right up against a we understand it, is a very different | brand new experiment, as far as this matter from raising a calf. something we surely cannot ignore. me the tremendous waste occasioned by the annual cutting of literally millions of young trees for the Christmas-tree trade. One can hardly blame our neighbors to the south for being well content to allow us to denude our land as we are doing and sell them hundreds of thousands of good trees at a few cents each. seems almost absurd that the Government should spend the money they do each year in replanting and permit all their efforts to be more than offset by this one comparatively un-

W. H. H. BOSWELL,

Half A Century Since Vancouver

Though Vancouver made no fuss about it at all, May 24 was one of the most important aniversaries in the history of the city. It was on May 24, 1887, at 2.45 p.m., that the first transcontinental train, its engine clothed in flags and slogans, and bear ing a portrait of Queen Victoria,

That train, 50 years ago, did a num er of things which Vancouver should remember. It fofged another link in the chain of Confederation, binding the Pacific province to the provinces on the Atlantic. It tied the baby city on Burard Inlet into the Canadian commercial fabric; and gave it the start which enabled it to make a progressively larger place for itself. It gave Vancouver a position, too, on the He got half way down and then Red in Maine, R. I. Red in New York, "All Red Line", the all-British system of transportation which ties the Dominions and the Motherland

Vancouver would do well to rem ember that first train, for it had not come, while there would still be a city on Burrard Inlet, it would not be Van couver, and it would not be where Vancouver stands, but farther east, at the Inlet's head How the difference in location would have affected the fortunes of the port it is perhaps useless to argue, but there is not much doubt these fortunes would have been affected. The city would have been farther from the sea, farther from the beaches and resorts which have developed, closer to the North Arm and the mountains, closer to the Fraser and the Pitt, closer to New Westminster. It would have been a city with Park having been given the Scouts by problems different from those Vancouver had had to master. It would very likely have had different people at the start. In short, it would have been a different city.

The Skunk as a Pet

. . . And the skunk, whatever his virtues, is not just the kind of a pet one would like to have running around the garden. He is reputed, among other things, to be a great raider of chicken-coops. It is with his bad habits, not his virtues, that we have unfortunately become familiar in this province. At the last session of the Legislature there was a somewhat heated debate as to whether the Minister of Agriculture was not being "gypped" in paying the provincial bounty on skunk snouts bootlegged in from the other provinces. the bounty should be abolished for the skunk's benefit.- Charlottetown Guardian.

a foal as any city man starting out farming. The general opinion seems to be that there is a good deal of luck attached to the business. Everyone expresses the opinion, that it pays to raise colts, "providing you have luck." In the next year or two we will try to find out if we have any "luck" in raising our own work horses.

Must Save Trees Or Suffer For It

Letter in Toronto Globe and Mail: -I feel quite sure that your excellent editorials on reforestation are doing much to awaken the people of this Province to the disastrous results of the present lack of proper control in regard to the cutting down and replanting of our wooded areas.

Any one who gives any thought to the subject can hardly fail to wonder why more definite steps are not being taken by means of proper legislation to guard against the inevitable results of this situation. There is ample evidence of the benefits which have been obtained by the methods in use in some of the older countries, which have been realized in time that their forests are not inexhaustible and have taken the necessary steps to conserve them. The fact that by so doing they have placed a great industry on a permanent footing is only one, and perhaps not the most important, point. The effect on the water supply and the preserving of the soil for agricultural purposes is

Eight years ago she was a schoolgirl in the Middle West. The other day her death was the biggest news of the day-biggest in the sense that it interested the most people.

Few, perhaps, would say that she was a great actress. Her sudden rise to fame and wealt' was due not to extraordinary talent but to extraordinary hair. Because of her, every city, town and village in America | poultry press is headlining a single had its "platinum blondes."

Yet it would be unkind and untrue to deny her credit for what she did achieve. In a field where many aspire and few succeed she succeeded. He Lost His Kilt

Like all English crowds, London's Coronation crowd maintained reputation as the most good-humo."ad in the world. It laughed at every thing, even when messages came through the police loud-speakers asking for lost children to go to the nearest street corner, statue, or to the police station where their anxious parents were loking for them. The most humorous episode, however, of the whole celebration occurred at Oxford Circus, where a braw Highlander in a kilt decided that he would descend the escalator sitting. there was a ripping noise. His kill had got caught in the stairway and parted company with him! The crowd roared. The Highlander remained seated and he did not move again until somebody brought him a mackintosh!-Vancouver Province.

His Master's Car

How can a dog know his master's automobile from thousands of other similar cars a block away, by the sound of its motor?

Arthur Lawson, "red-cap" at the Union Pacific would like an answer to the question, as he told of a strange experience of the past week. A stray dog wandered into the station. He refused to allow anyone to come near him, although accepting regular food rations from kindhearted Arthur. For four days the dog sat on the sidewalk leading into the station watching automobiles go by. During the time Arthur estimates 200,000 or more cars whizzed along Colorado street. "Then all of a sudden," said the "red-cap," "the dog made a dash into the street incidentally knocking me down as he went by. He jumped into a car and sure enough, it was the owner. The strangest part about it is that he started on his w'ld dash even before the car was in sight."

A happy reunion between the dog and his owner followed in which the "red-cap" came in for a large share of thanks for the care he took of the devoted pet. Strangely enough, after introductions, the dog who heretofore had paid no attention whatever to Arthur or anyone else around the Union Pacific station, jumped about the "red-cap" in frenz'es of joy as if he too were extending thanks.

This history-making Plymouth Rock in the Maine State contest, very properly hails from Massachusetts and belongs to the famous Weber Duck Farm at Wrentham, familiar to thousands of motor tourists. The Webster pen of Barred Rocks holds first place in the Maine test, with 1,873 eggs and 1.853 points, and the top hen's indiv-

Ran "Egg and Egg" For two months she tied the nation test, but in April she forged ahead, and got the lead; and 'way out in Texas a White Leghorn hen slipped past the Red hen by 85-100 of a point. The Texas Leghorn's score is now 208 eggs, 221.85 points, and the Red hen running third has 202 eggs, 221 points. The seventh-month review of all the contestants shows the ton highest-scoring individuals, by breeds in the following order: Barred Rock in Maine, White Leghorn in Texas; R. I Red in Connecticut, Leghorn in western New York, New Hampshire two Leghorns in central New York, R.

The already world-famous Hanson Leghora pen from Corvalis, Ore., now leads the world at the Central New York test, with a score of 1,902 cans, 1,996.55 points. while the score of the Dryden Poultry Farm pen, in second place, at the Western New York test is 1,803 eggs, 1,889,70 points, in mass formation the White Leghorn "eng machines" generally prevail, but this year the ten highest pen scores for the whole country show five Leghorn teams, four of Rhode Island Reds and one of Barred Rocks - the Weber Duck Farm team, with the champion

The Empire's Way Another coronation visitor from South Africa belongs in a different class from King Yeta III of Barotseland. He is General J. B. M. Hertzog, Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa. He seems to be enjoying himself greatly in the picture with George VI and a couple of other Prime Ministers, Stanley Baldwin and Mackenzie King, all in civilian morning dress. Thirty-five years ago, more or less, General Hertzog, at the head of a Boer commando, was doing his best to make himself disagreeable to George VI's great-grandmother, Victoria, and her son and successor, Edward VII. The best British Prime Ministers that South Africa has produced got their start in life fighting the British Empire and almost fighting it to a standstill; like General Smuts. After the war General Hertzog went into politics and continued to make himself disagreeable as the leader of the Nationalist opposition, But time has been known to work wonders and the British Empire has a way with it .- New York Times.
