Vagabond Farmer in Prairie Province

On a Farm in Southwestern Manitoba

(By R. Alex. Sim)

Last night we were speeding toward the West on No. 2 Highway, Manitoba. It was getting late and we were hungry. We spotted a fine house with a wide lawn and trees and shrubs planted about it. Just the place to camp we said. The man and his wife, who happened to be graduates of the University of Manitoba, were glad to let us camp on the lawn although they had never seen any of us before. This type of hospitality would surprise travellers with a city background. We cooked our supper, then went into the house for games and a sing-song. With Charlie's mouth organ, Frank's guitar and the hired man's violin, we had a dandy orchestra. Not only did we have a splendid evening, but our new friends were able to tell us about the wheat pool, stock breeding and various other subjects of interest to farmers.
 The last letter was written from a rocky crag on the stormy shores of Lake Superior; we now are on the plains, though they are by no means treeless in this section. We motored into the twin Lakehead cities, Fort William and Port Arthur. Besides the historic spot where fur-traders of the Northwest Company once built their post, Mount McKay rears itself 1,800 feet above the water. Perched on a cliff beneath the shadow of a huge cross erected to the memory of Indian braves fallen in the Great War, we gazed out over the twinkling lights of the great inland ports and the shadowy outline of Thunder Bay. Countless elevators, symbolic of the part wheat has played in the building of these and all Canadian cities, line the waters edge. Pool 7, the largest elevator in the world, can alone hold seven million of the total ninety five million capacity of these two ports. Shoving on by the Trans-Canada highway we resumed our journey westward on Canadian soil. After a couple of hours' run we had the misfortune to get a nail in the tire of the trailer. The tube was ruined, and we had to drive 60 miles for a new one, so great are the distances between villages in this new land. The station attendant said he knew almost every family on this line between Dryden and Fort William, a distance of over 200 miles. It occurred to me it would be a great country for gossip. Charlie and Frank stayed with the trailer, and while Don and I were away they wandered into a lumber camp to get a meal of immense proportions. Don and I took a carload of children with us for the tire, who were perfectly thrilled by the ride, although we couldn't satisfy the demands of one youngster to go 80 miles an hour. The people were Finnish and Ukrainian with a few Italians thrown in. We were invited to stay that evening for a party. It was a huge success from our standpoint, for it gave us an insight into the life of these new Canadians. The village is on the main line of the C.P.R. and when ever a train would pass through the party would be practically broken up, as they must all go to watch the trains come into the station.

He was not gone more than fifteen minutes when he was informed that his mill was on fire. About twenty men were there in a few minutes and helped remove a quantity of shingles. They held the fire in check and kept it from spreading, but were helpless to save the building and its contents. It is quite a loss to Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie as they had no insurance. Bill intends pointing on his own farm sometime in the near future.

Anniversary Services at St. Paul's

Farr conducted the afternoon service and his brother, Rev. B. H. Farr, B.A., L.Th. of Dorchester, delivered a splendid address at the evening service, which was much appreciated. The surplised choir, Trinity and St. Pauls sang anthems at each service; also Mr. Wm. Coburn of Holstein, delivered a solo "The Holy City". On the following Monday evening, the garden party being held, the attendance was average, although inclement weather prevailed. The play put on by the young people of Priceville proved very interesting with a splendid moral. Rev. Wright of Priceville was present and assisted with the play. Messrs. Seales and Hargrave gave excellent music between acts. A sumptuous lunch was served at the close of the play.

HORSESHOES OR HAIRSPRINGS

Five dollars worth of iron made into horseshoes had a market value of ten dollars. Converted into needles that five dollars worth of iron becomes worth six thousand, eight hundred dollars, but when made into hair springs for watches it is worth two million dollars.
 We may all be compared with that original five dollars worth of iron—what we make of ourselves—how valuable we become, depends upon ourselves.
 Most of us are content to be in the horseshoe class. A few reach the rank of needles, but how rare is the man who can be classed as a hair spring—the man who makes the most of every talent he was born with—who not merely takes advantage of every opportunity, but Napoleon-like, creates opportunities.

Popular Ontario Holiday

Summer life in Ontario is centered, as far as possible around its many thousands of lakes ranging in size from the great "Inland Sea" that mark the southern boundary, to small, unnamed lakes in the northern hinterland. Fishing, swimming, and boating are the chief pastimes with golf, tennis, riding and hiking as leading land sports.

Search for a perfect holiday like this is what makes bungalow camps like those at French River and Devil's Gap near Kenora so popular. Their location, not far from the city yet in unspoiled heavily wooded lake country, gives them undisputed advantages. The Canadian Pacific Railway's chalet-bungalow camps at Devil's

Gap and French River are outstanding examples of this type of holiday resort. Fishing is excellent for "muskie", great northern pike, large and small mouth bass, trout and other game fish. The camps have their own modern facilities, including ice-houses, pumping plants, and electric light plants.
