SLICED VERY THIN

By Sixbits
 "No Matter How Thin You Slice It — It's Still Eloquent!" The United States authorities held up the return to Canada of the Seagram Cup—which Lawson Little copped at St. Andrews last year—on the ground that it was made of gold and they have some sort of a law forbidding the export of said metal from their fair country, probably on the ground that they are a trifle short.

They wouldn't have been bothered to do that with a certain famous trophy. As we remember it, this was a jug or some such which the Kaiser of Germany—remember him?—presented to a English Yacht Club, and all the papers at the time were full of stories about what a valuable piece of jewelry it was, being made of pure gold and worth something less than a million.

Well, it seems that the Kaiser and his cousin King George parted brass regs for some reason or other which we just discerned at the moment, and up comes a war between England and Germany which some of you may recall.

Well, at the height of this war, when mutual indignation was hotter than a blast furnace, everybody on both sides started tossing in valuables to their respective Governments to help along the sacred cause.

So what will do but this English Yacht Club must chuck in this very valuable trophy which they had got from the now-dead Kaiser.

But when they came to throw it into the melting pot, they discovered, to their annoyance, that Wilhelm had pulled a fast one and that the jug was nothing but pie-plate metal with a wash of gold over it about as thick as our bankroll the evening before payday—and that the total value was about $7.98 or some such.

Mention of the sport of yachting always recalls to us a little incident which completely cured a group of well-known Toronto citizens of the gentle habit of practical joking.

This group set off on a yachting trip down the lakes, and included in the party was a lightweight boxer who was supposed to be keeping in training. He got little encouragement in exercising from his fellow yachtsmen—unless it was the elbow muscles—and all the training he did the first day out would not raise perspiration on a flea.

So the next morning the yacht put in to shore to get some milk for the breakfast java, and this fighter was the one chosen to go and interview the cow or the cow's owner.

But as soon as the fighter steps ashore, the yacht puts out again and all the rest of the gang holler at the poor pugilist saying that they will meet him at Soandoo—naming a port about ten miles down the line—and that the roadwork will be very good for him indeed.

So off they go, chucking over the merry jest, and on their way to Soandoo they come across a commercial fisherman who is just inspecting his net; and as they pass close by, this fisherman tosses on their deck the defunct body of a seagull which has got caught in the netting and drowned very dead.

Still in a merry mood, one of the party plucks all the feathers off the gull and puts the remains in the pantry—or galley—or whatever the nautical term may be.

They get to Soandoo and meet up with some of the gang there and nothing will do but they must remain for a dance which the local yacht club is throwing that evening.

In due course the fighter arrives, and he is so hot about being dumped on the road that he will not join the party at the dance that evening. "All right," they tell him, "you cook up a good mess of mulligan when we are gone, and as soon as we come back we will eat and then be off for Kingston."

Along about midnight the dancing party returns to the yacht, very hungry although not suffering any from the drought. They tear into the mulligan—which is a kind of stew for the benefit of any who don't know—like nobody's business.

When they are about finished with the potful, one member of the gang speaks up. "Tommy," he says addressing the fighter, "I just wish to say that was about the sweetest mulligan I ever tasted.
 But what"—holding up what looks like the bone of a fowl—"what is this in it?"

"That," replies the amateur cook. "Why that is nothing but the chicken I found in the galley."

Here and There WITH THE
BOY SCOUTS

Boy Scout world census figures for 1937, just compiled by the International Bureau, reveal a new record increase of 340,000. The figures bring the world total membership to 2,812,074. The last world census, taken in 1935, gave a total of 2,472-014. Scouting is active today in 49 countries counting the British Empire as one.

The Herculean job of feeding some 25,000 Boy Scouts is reflected in some of the catering figures of the American National Scout Jamboree, recently held in Washington. For the 75,000 "boy meals" served each day, the cooks ordered 250 tons of foodstuffs. This included 900 bushels of potatoes, 13,000 pounds of bread, 25,000 quarts of milk, 4,000 pounds of butter, 50,000 eggs and 1,200 gal-ons of canned vegetables, such as tomatoes, corn, succotash and string beans, which, after consuming, the boys went out into the arena and played Indians-and-cowboys.

An interesting introduction of a public official involving Boy Scouts took place in New York recently.
 Governor Lehman appointed Charles W. Frossel, a Justice of the City Court, and he was inducted into office before nearly 400 people. As the ceremony was drawing to a close, Eagle Scout Theodore Endres was called to the Bench, and he administered the oath of the Boy Scouts of America, with Justice Frossel repeating. This ceremony was requested by Justice Frossel, who has given 16 years of service to the Scout Movement.

The rescue after two hours' effort of a young woman clinging to the face of a cliff was an achievement this summer of the 6th Bridgewater Boy Scout Troop, Somerset, England.
 A young man and his fiancée had been caught by the tide in a cove, and attempted to scale the cliff. The young woman was unable to complete the ascent, and her companion, finally gaining the top, discovered the Scouts, and called upon them for help. With rope and tackle the Scouts descended the cliff by another route, then ascended to the young lady, secured her with their lines, and climbing ahead, hauled her by stages to safety.

Queer Insects
Brought to Zoo
Bugs Appear to Be Three-Way
Cross; Foreclaws Like
Crab's

DETROIT—Zoological curiosity from New Mexico, Arkansas and Ontario have swelled the collection at the Michigan Insect Zoo in Conception Park, during the last week.

Bugs that appear to be a threeway cross between scorpions, crabs, fish, and beetles are the two-winged roams from New Mexico.
 These curious insects have a pair of foreclaws that look—and are used—much like those on a crab, crayfish or lobster. Their big bodies look like that of the Prionus beetle. And they sport long tail pieces reminiscent of the scorpion. They are voracious, often attacking each other in their cage. But they are death-smaller insects, and so come under the "beneficial" heading.

From Arkansas come a pair of cottonmouth water moccasins, poisonous snakes of the swamps and lowlands. Never found in the northern half of the United States, water moccasins pack deadly venom in their snowy jaws. They strike without a warning, and are rightly feared in their native haunts. They live on many varieties of land and water insects, rodents and fish.

The Canadian curiosity is a blab-ber katydid—a biological "spout" that closely resembles the common katydid in everything but color. For this insect's coloring is a vivid rose-pink from the tips of his long antennae to the end of his tail.

Some 15 varieties of more common caterpillars, beetles and other insects, including many now feeding on Michigan gardens and fields, has also been put on display. The Insect Zoo is open daily from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Whistler Made
A Saucy Map

1854 Chart Drawn by Pe- trous Artist, Brings Government Trouble

WASHINGTON—The Coast and Geodetic Survey is trying to vindicate its way around an art tempest involving the work of its one-time employ-—Whistler, the painter.

Here's the log of the trouble: Back in 1854 a sailing youth of 20 named James Abbot McNeill Whistler was doing engravings for the geographical agency.

His work was map-making, but he had a hard time confining himself to its rigid restrictions. He kept throwing in impudent sketches of wild birds.

Exact officials, provoked with his decorations, advised him that the United States Government would try to get along without him.

Whistler went his way to become a world-famous painter. The survey went its way with a couple of Whistler engravings. Eighty-three years went their way.

Last spring someone grossly dis-spread the word that the agency was selling original Whistler engravings for 20 cents.

Requests poured in.
 The survey workers replied by sending a map of Anzac Island in South Santa Barbara Channel, Calif. in one corner it says:

"Eng. by J. A. Whistler, J. Young and C. A. Knight." Complaints poured in. The map wasn't an original.

Now the government, which never said it had an original, has issued a 307-word letter explaining.

The first plate isn't available.
 The maps are from photographic prints of the plate.

And—you can have your money back if you want it.

The map, incidentally, is a pretty one, and you can see Whistler's mark —two saucy groups of sea gulls where no sea gulls ought to be.
