"A skunk," says a nature writer, "is a fine pet when still young, which brings the comment from the office boy, 'That is, until it gets old enough to have 'scents.'"

New York doctors told Sam Diamond, 44-year-old World War veteran they'd have to amputate his right leg because of a chronic blood ailment. Sam, who has already yielded to amputation of his left leg because of the disease, said they wouldn't. He'd hitch-hike west to Soap Lake, Wash., and its healing waters," he said. "You'll never make it," the doctors said. Sam did—in just 16 days.

Do You Know? By Chas. Wyse That good roads, automobiles, centralized buying will eliminate the small country villages and storekeepers in the near future. That the once prosperous independent grocer is being gradually squeezed out of business by the chain stores. That radio advertising, news and market broadcasts are taking the place of the daily newspaper in thousands of homes. That the travelling salesman who sold grocery whips died of starvation years ago. That travelling salesmen are almost extinct on the railroad passenger trains. That storekeepers in railroad towns complain of slow business because railroad employees' wives, who possess a railway pass, shop in the cities. That in beer parlors, the average women drinkers are between the ages of 21 and 22. Some are 30 but most are far too young. That the continual war scare headlines in the daily newspapers have shot markets all to H—lter. That in the small towns the resident bakers who pay taxes and wages have too much outside competition encroaching on their territory. Housewives, if your husband was unemployed and the local factory hired outside help, would you think that fair? Think it over,—it's up to you. That there are millions of yards of Print Goods all wrapped up and no place to go that were sold in years gone by, when the dry goods salesman would drive to the country store with a team of horses and fourteen trunks of merchandise. That the ladies will always get a run for their money when they buy and wear silk stockings. That the country fairs are now on and a lot of "peaches" may be seen with someone else's pumpkin. That you will soon be wishing a Merry Xmas and wondering what Santa Claus will bring you. But remember it was a hot summer, so don't complain about the cold this winter. Here is a bit of good advice, "Never put off till tomorrow what you can do today. To-morrow it may be taxed." Ted Graham, the famous sporting son belonging to Owen Sound, will coach Owen Sound Jr. Hockey Club this winter. With the new artificial ice rink going up in that city, they expect to go places this winter. A Scotchman and a Jew had a collision and after the Scotchman got his breath he scrambled from underneath his car and went over to Izzy, who was lying prostrate in the ditch. Said Sandy, "Are ye badly hurt?" Izzy groaned and Sandy pulled a flask out of his pocket, saying "Here take a drink. Are you feeling any better? Here, take another drink." Just then a cop came around the corner and inquired what was the matter. Sandy pocketed the flask and replied "Don't ask me, but just smell that fellow's breath."
