New Coiffures From History

Old Paintings Also Contribute To the Up-Swept Silhouettes

Presenting three new hair silhouettes as the natural evolution of his high coiffure predictions of two years ago, Guillaume de Paris has come to this country to demonstrate his ideas for the future. He presents three groups of new coiffure fashions; one inspired by the Versailles of Fragonard, of Boucher, of aristocratic shepherdesses of Louis XIV's time... a second group reminiscent of the elegance of Louis, of Renouit, of Boldini, of Sarah Bernhardt and Rejane... and L'Aiglon, the coiffure of the future.

Versailles, 1920, L'Aiglon Versailles—this group of coiffures features supple curls lightly drawn back from the face, with the high ringlets at the back of the head as well as high over the forehead.

1920—This is a more severe style of coiffure, best suited to young girls with lovely necklines and the beautiful profiles. It features curls piled high in front, and great simplicity at the back of the head, with the hair drawn up smoothly there. This group of coiffures was for a long, oval head.

L'Aiglon—this group of coiffures was inspired by paintings of the gallant young son of Napoleon and Marie Louise, L'Aiglon is Guillaume's culture prophesy for the coming winter and spring. For this—the hair is cut in classic fashion, Guillaume introduces L'Aiglon to give the effect of the long, oval head with a natural upward hair movement.

Women's Rights Are Threatened

World Woman's Party Is On The Look-out for Measures Undermining Feminine Freedom

Women need to watch their rights on a world front these days, in the opinion of Alice Paul, chairman of the newly-organized World Woman's Party.

"The world has become so closely knit together," Miss Paul said this week. "That matters are being settled for us all in treaties adopted at international conferences."

She agreed to head the world women's group in order to provide women with a "watchdog" for their rights at such international parleys.

Some measures which Miss Paul said were threatening women's equality were:

1. Two treaties adopted by the international labor conference limiting the right of women to work at night between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.

2. Recognition of "the old European" nationality system by which a woman takes her husband's nationality and a mother gives her nationality only to an illegitimate offspring.

Miss Paul said the new party wants the world to recognize and establish a liberty and equality without distinction as to sex.

"Sportsman Flies High"

by Lawrence Keating

Synopsis
Detective Dan Colwell of the Graber-Vael private detective agency is assigned the job of shadowing McDonald whose wife fears gangster enemies are plotting to murder him. McDonald is killed in spite of Colwell's watchfulness. Now, with McDonald dead the smuggling ring which he led has become disorganized. Colwell risks his life to gather evidence by playing one against another.

CHAPTER XI

"Hold on, Otto," he begged. "We got a fella in the next room knows it, and all we got to do is make him spill, see?"

Graber rose from his chair. His gun was put away and his big fists doubled at his sides as he chewed mentally on this latest information.

"If I hadn't put a squawk you weren't going to tell me you had a guy who knows the numbers. Fine pals!"

"Bunk, Otto. We weren't forgetting you! Were we, Helen?" "You know how the stuff is coming in; we don't. That proves we needed you, Otto."

"Who is this guy?" "Colwell."

Through a crack in the partly open bedroom door Dan could see and hear. He watched Graber's face change. The man scarcely credited his ears at first; then he grew red in a wave that flowed up his thick neck and burst over his square German cheeks.

"Colwell!" He cursed with lurid imagination. "Colwell! He got the numbers? So he's trying to horn in! Mac starts the double-cross—hell! You two figured to pull a fast one, laying the blame on Mac so I don't suspect anything! But I'm wise to you!"

"Now Colwell's got ambitious, eh?" Graber cleared his throat with a great urrrumph. "That's rich. A forty a week peeper wants to horn in on the heavy sugar! Well," he flung at them, "don't gawk like a couple of dummies! Where's Colwell?"

"In the bedroom," Helen said heavily. "Bring him out! Snap into it, Lefty!"

Terrible Anger
Quillen stamped to the bedroom, his face flushed a queer purple with rage he strove to control. He liked Graber no better than when he had set out to violate the confidence of the ring by murdering McDonald. But Quillen had plenty of respect for Graber, and so had Helen Fane.

"Get up!" Colwell complied slowly as if he were very weak. As a matter of fact he felt almost all right. He passed Quillen sullenly and went into the living room that looked like a Kansas cyclone had struck it. Graber greeted him with evil, slitted eyes, his fists clenched until the knuckles shone white.

"Colwell," he barked, "you're a sap to monkey with us!" There was no reply. "So you won't talk, eh? You ain't going to tell us where you've got that license number?"

"No," said Dan. "I'm not." He strove to make out what time the infinitesimal hands said on Helen Fane's wrist watch.

Graber pitted his crass obstinacy. "I guess you better carve him, Lefty. That's good medicine for smart guys!"

Quillen scowled. "I ain't got my knife. What's the matter with a gun?" "You got a bread knife around somewhere, haven't you?"

Helen hesitated at Graber's imperative gesture, then slowly went to the kitchenette. She returned with a gleaming bread knife with saw edges. Graber squinted. "Put him on the floor. We'll carve a couple of figure eights on his chest and then maybe he'll talk."

fool to put himself in more trouble than he could care for. But how else was he to learn the nature of the dope smuggling than by some chance, cleverly drawn out sentence? Not by staying away from them. It was a contest now whether he would get away alive. And hope diminished as minutes passed. It diminished too, for the knowledge he needed to get the quarter million worth of snow before they got it!

"Have a—good hunting trip?" he panted at Graber, and stared at the tips of his fingers to learn if it was blood trickling down his temple. It was.

"Sweet! I shot a buck today. You'll see about it in the...ews tomorrow. Know that guy signs himself G.K.G. and runs that column 'Around Town'?" Read about me there tomorrow morning, Colwell—if you can!

"Before We Kill You" "Come on," he growled, "put him flat and let's get going!" Graber suited action to his words. Quillen sprang to his aid. There was another furious tussle but in his weakened condition Colwell was no match for the powerful hulks. With Graber seated on his chest and pinning his wrists and Helen's weight on his legs, he was helpless.

He put his blunt fingers to Dan's shirt and ripped it, leaving his chest exposed. Of a sudden the captive set up a new battle that interrupted proceedings. He got an arm free and shot a hook to the jaw that sent Otto reeling back.

But they subdued him. Helen buckled a belt around his thighs. The heavy Graber straddled him. "Go on, Lefty!" he panted. "Colwell, tell us those numbers. You hear? Damn you!" he rasped. "Give us those numbers before we kill you!"

When Girls Grow Taller Than Boys

"Adolescent Spurt" Starts for Girl When She's 9; For Boy When He's 12

One fact that very few parents realize is that boys and girls grow differently. Dr. Josephine Kenyon, of New York, last week told the Fifth Institute on the Exceptional Child. "Until they are 8 years old, the growth is the same, but the adolescent spurt starts for the girl when she is 9 and for the boy when he is 12."

Eventually Grows Taller "So while the boy is still slowing down, the girl is shooting upward so rapidly that before long she outstrips him and for three years the girls are actually taller than boys of the same age."

Dr. Kenyon said that a boy's adolescent spurt is well underway by the time that he is 14, while a great many girls have reached the full height when 16. Boys continue to grow until they are 21, when the average youth is slightly more than four and a half inches taller than the average girl.

Instruction In Charm Necessary

Tact Should Be Taught Early, Parents' Duty to Teach Boys and Girls Gracious Manners

When a girl is thirteen or fourteen, it is time to teach her something about charm. For charm is going to be her stock in trade, to be frank.

It is the finest asset of any human being, indeed, but the girl without charm seems to deny her femininity. Or is being denied it, because it is the parents' place to train her, writes Olive Roberts Barton.

Naturally the art of kindness and friendliness should have been also taught from early childhood. And friendliness is an art as well as a virtue. It is one thing to feel very friendly to people but another thing to show them we feel friendly and make them feel comfortable and happy in the knowledge. But there are certain graces to be added to the unsophisticated sociability of early years, to make the woman womanly, the girl, just as the word implies, "gracious."

Tact is a wonderful thing. To say the right thing at the right time is the crux, I think, of gentility. To rescue a situation by turning the subject quickly to another matter.

Boys and girls, too, need to be taught this social habit early if they are to make friends. And keep them.

CHRISTMAS GOODIES
When you feel inclined to groan at the thought of the Christmas presents you have to buy and wonder where will the money come from—forget about it. For a very little money, some time and some materials, you can give lovely gifts to all those people you want to make happy. There are so many people who would enjoy home-made candies at Christmas time, men and women who live away from home and don't get home-made treats very often — boys and girls at boarding schools who may be going home but who would like to take something back to treat their friends and those unfortunate people who will have to be in hospital during the happy season. A daintily packaged box of home-made candies is not just a gift—it carries something of your personality and is doubly appreciated by the recipient because of the personal effort that has been put into it.

Here are recipes for a nice assortment.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS

1 cup sugar
1/2 cup light corn syrup
3 squares unweetened chocolate, cut in pieces
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 1/2 cups heavy cream.

Combine sugar, corn syrup, chocolate, salt, and 1/2 cup cream. Place over low flame and stir constantly until sugar is dissolved and mixture boils. Continue cooking until a small amount of mixture forms a soft ball in cold water (238 degrees F.), stirring constantly. Add remaining 1/2 cup cream and cook until a small amount of mixture forms a firm ball in cold water (264 degrees F.), stirring constantly. Remove from fire; pour into slightly buttered pan, 8 x 4 inches. Do not scrape pan. Let stand until cold. Mark with knife in 3-4 inch squares, turn out on cold slab, turn right side up, and cut into squares with full length of long, sharp knife. Let stand 2 to 3 hours to dry. Wrap each caramel in waxed paper. Makes 40 caramels.

"I want a little one," replied the woman.

"All right, I take that to mean a trial before a judge," remarked Judge Millar.
