W. E. Harris defended the patronage system, which had been derided by a previous speaker. renage is an evil only if practised that It is all right to help those who need it, if fair and above board. He thought a man from the East side of riding the only candidate who could win out, and believed a winning organization could be built up in Grey-Bruce. The Tory candidate would probably be low man again, and the lady candidate should be fought with her own weapons.

After being chosen the candidate, Mr Harris made a neat reply, expres sing his warm thanks to the delegates for their strong support and for the next four months (before the expected election in October) he would give his best efforts to redeem the Riding, counting upon the hearty cooperation of all friends of beginning to end, but it was sure evidence the Liberals were not fading
