

The Pompadour Has Returned

Horse-and-Buggy Hairdo is All the Rage — Hats Designed to Accommodate It

Pompadours are here. We had heard tiny, almost imperceptible whispers and then suddenly we did awaken one morning to find that pompadours were here. Whether they are here to stay, is difficult to say. But since millinery is being designed to accommodate the new coiffure, they are here to stay for awhile, at least.

There are little pompadours that hardly stand up at all; both they and their wearers peep out, looking over the world in a very shy and embarrassed manner. Then there are the frank pompadours that are waved and stand up four or five inches and their owners, while self-conscious, hold their heads high—more, we believe because they are afraid their proud pompadours will come tumbling down.

SHOW HAIR IN FRONT Both large and small hats are made to emphasize the pompadour coiffures. Many have an indentation under the brim to keep the pompadour from becoming a bang. Most new hats have a long back line and this is necessitated by showing the hair in front. This line is often achieved by the use of a close-fitting cap of a knitted weave in wool that holds the brim firmly on the head.

Introducing a New Coiffure

Ann Rutherford's high-low coiffure adapts itself to either daytime or evening wear, and she recommends this hair style for the sub-deb. The front hair is brushed into a soft wave that forms in bangs on the forehead.

Crisp Curtains Cool-Looking

Newest Ones Take Tip From Fashions in Lingerie

Many homemakers realize that the best way to make a bedroom look cool, dainty and restful during the hot weather is to anchor clouds of colorful crisp curtains at the windows.

The newest curtains, taking a tip from lingerie fashions, are made of lovely transparent cottons — marquisettes, dotted nets, and crease-resistant voiles. This year, many come with new styles in glass curtains carry labels guaranteeing that the shrinkage will never spoil their perfect fit.

BUY THEM TO MEASURE These serviceable modern finishes put an end to the uneven hems and skimpy widths that used to be a trial to homemakers who liked their curtains spic and span. Nowadays, you can buy glass curtains that will fit almost every size window since the lengths come in three or more measurements.

FLOURCES FAVORED One pretty new style of curtain for summer is made of lovely tulle with generous fullness and with eyelet embroidery flounces in a Victorian daisy pattern. These curtains come in snowy white, in flattering petal pink, in cool, shadowy blues or in cheerful, sunny daffodil yellow. One curtain in this new style has flounces as varied as the trimmings of this season's dresses. There are wide flounces which have contrasting colored plings, solid embroidery in cherry patterns and applied motifs finished with fagotting.

Dressing table skirts and bed spreads are also shown to match the curtains, so that with no trouble at all you may have a neat, well-groomed looking room with a carefully planned color scheme.

Hope is like the sky at night: there is no corner so dark but that persevering eye will discover a star.—Octave Feuillet.

TRY IT THE "SALADA" WAY

Infuse 6 heaping teaspoons of Salada Black Tea in a pint of fresh, boiling water. After 6 minutes strain liquid into 2-quart container, white hot, add 1 to 1½ cups of sugar and juice of 2 lemons, strained, stir until sugar is dissolved; fill container with cold water. Do not allow tea to cool before adding cold water or liquid will become cloudy. Serve with chopped ice. The above makes 7 full glasses.

COREY PORTER was king of the social whirl. So . . . But go on with the story.

Last week: At Lake Placid Sally sees Dan again, talks with him in the belief she may be able thus to forget him forever.

CHAPTER XXIII

There had been nothing for Corey to do but to follow Sally. Corey never refused a dare, which was practically what Sally's remark, "You're not afraid to go are you?" had meant.

If Dan was surprised when they approached him, he did not betray it. His color, underneath the smooth deep tan, might have deepened a bit, but his gray eyes were grave and steady.

"We came to congratulate you on winning," Sally said, holding out her hand. "How are you, Dan?" There was no need to ask, this was the Dan of old, sturdy and strong as the mountains he set out to conquer.

"I'm very well, thank you," he returned, taking her hand, but only for a brief moment. "And how are you, Sally?" he added, though there seemed no need to ask that, either. Sally's dark eyes had never been brighter, she had never looked more lovely.

Was that all he had to say to her? Sally wondered. Didn't he know what just seeing him did to her? Wasn't his heart hammering very painfully, too?

"I'm fine," Sally said. "Never better, thank you." She tossed her dark curls. He must see how gay she was, how right her world. "Oh, well, you've got what you wanted — at last," she said. "You've made the Olympics this time, Dan."

"I guess that's right," Dan said. His glance went to her left hand. She'd taken off her mittens, on her third finger Corey's diamond sparkled in the bright sun. "I see you've got what you wanted, too," Dan added.

"Yes," Corey spoke up, he could not keep the smug satisfaction out of his tone. "Congratulations are in order again. Since Sally's what I do want."

"I wish you both all the happiness in the world," Dan returned.

Which world do you mean? Sally wanted to ask. Mine, or yours, Dan? But she knew the answer to that question. She knew now that Dan would never come back. He hadn't belonged in her world. He had been right in going away.

She knew the answer to a lot of other questions too. This meeting, instead of convincing her that she could put Dan out of her heart, had shown her that she still believed in him, whether he ever believed in her again or not, that she could never forget him.

How could she go on pretending now? How could she be the glamor girl, always laughing and gay? How could she live through these next days knowing Dan was so near, yet lost to her forever, knowing that she must go on being the Sally Blair who wore Corey's ring on her engagement finger?

An Egg Shampoo For Fluffy Hair

Here's How To Go About Giving Yourself One

The egg shampoo has long been a favorite, as one can see at once how it not only cleanses but imparts a soft fluffiness that means real beauty. We believe when one takes the time to do the shampoo it will be more interesting to make it a special kind. The theory of using only the whites for blonde hair and the yolk for brunettes is old-fashioned, as the whole egg is good for any and all hair.

First separate the white and yolk and beat well. This breaks any of the stringy substance and prevents it from clinging to the hair. A tablespoonful of the shampoo added to the yolk will make the mixture easy to manage.

Brush or comb the hair well before it is wet. Apply the shampoo all over the scalp. A little cotton applicator dipped in the shampoo is the best method for this. When well saturated, hold the head over the bowl and with the water a bit warmer than tepid, use the tips of the fingers for the operation. And there should be a thick lather after a few minutes. Spray to remove the soap, then apply the egg mixture in the same way — the white and the yolk together.

"Do you think there's any chance of a storm?" Corey asked, a bit dubiously. "Maybe we'd better not try it to-day, Sally."

"Why not?" Sally's dark eyes challenged the sky. She wasn't at all afraid of danger. She wanted, if anything, to force it, to lose herself in a new fight.

"Check," Corey said, using their old phrase for agreement. He would not refuse to go just because of one gray cloud.

On their way they met Dan. He saw their skis and poles, walked over to them. He said, "Hello. You are not really going up today, are you? Don't you know the air's not right? There's going to be a blizzard." Dan could tell without looking at the slate sky what the weather promised. He was mountain-bred, mountain-trained.

"Blizzard!" Sally laughed. "Why, the sky's as clear as a bell. We don't mind a little snow, Dan! Even though we don't belong in this world." There was bitterness as well as irony in her tone.

"You don't know what you're talking about!" Dan returned roughly. He turned to Corey. "You're not going to let her go, are you?" he asked.

"Why not?" Corey said, as Sally had to him. "We're going up into the divide above timber . . ."

"You're crazy, if you do that!" Dan spoke earnestly now. His very grave eyes pleaded with Sally. "Do not try that trail today," he warned.

Sally shrugged her shoulders beneath her plaid jacket. Why should Dan ask her not to go? It did not matter to him what she did. She would show him that she would not run away from his world. "We'll be all right," she said briefly. "I can't really see what concern it is of yours, Dan." She knew that was a cruel thing to say. But she wanted to hurt him. If only she could make him suffer, as he had made her, make his heart ache.

"Perhaps you're right," Dan said. He flinched, a tiny white line was drawn around the stern set of his nice mouth. He knew Sally again thought him a coward. He knew she meant he had forfeited the right to make what she did any concern of his.

Corey never had known Sally to be so gay. She was that day, full of fun and laughter, the way he liked her to be. The sking was perfect what with the sharp wind against their faces, the blood racing through their bodies, the music of swift flight, the poetry of pure motion.

When they had had their fill, and were gloriously tired with the good weariness of clean physical effort, they stopped for time to rest. Corey built a fire beneath an icy waterfall and they had brought along steaks to broil, buds, a thermos of hot coffee.

"I guess our friend Reynolds is the one who is slightly crazy," Corey chuckled. "It's been a perfect day. I wouldn't have missed it for anything, would you, my sweet?"

"No," Sally returned. But something about the way she had been watching that leaden patch in the north. While they picnicked it had spread to alarming proportion, like thick gray felt. She called Corey's attention to it now, adding that perhaps they had better pack up and start down trail.

"They're just night clouds beginning to gather," Corey refused to be alarmed. But even as he spoke a snowflake drifted down. Another followed, and then another. They scrambled to their feet. "I guess we had better get going," Corey agreed. Now the snow fell with a smothering, soft persistence. The world was being blotted out before their eyes. They could not even see the waterfall that had looked like frozen rain.

"We'd better not use our skis," Sally said. They would carry them over a cliff too swiftly! It would be safer to walk. She thought of the divide, if they missed the trail, that sheer drop of more than 5,000 feet. No one could manage that big jump and stop himself with a Christie, not even Dan.

They plowed ahead, heads bent,

Peaches and Cream — Then More Peaches

Dessert planning these days should not be a difficult problem with all the delicious fruit on the market, from which to choose. Peaches are always one of the most popular. Perhaps that is why something which rates high is called "a peach."

Served with cream and sugar, peaches that are perfectly ripe and richly flavored are a dish fit for a king. Fresh peach pie and peach shortcake are treats expected by the family each year, now that the peach season is in full swing. Serve these often.

The rest of the dinner should be rather light since either the pie or the shortcake is rather a hearty dessert. For instance you might start the meal with tomato juice mixed with a little lemon juice. Then serve broiled or fried fish, with lima beans and a cucumber salad. The market will have to guide you regarding the fish, but we hope it will be brook trout. In preparing, sprinkle the fish lightly with lemon juice, roll in a mixture of flour and cornmeal (equal parts) and broil or fry crisp, first on one side then on the other. After the fish is on the platter sprinkle with salt and pepper.

PEACH PIE

10 perfectly ripe peaches, 3 eggs, 1 cup sugar, ¾ cup flour, 3 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons salt, 3 tablespoons water.

Scald the peaches, slip off the skins and cut in halves. Sift salt and flour and work in lard or butter or equal quantities of each. It is best to work in with pastry blender. Add water (very cold) a few drops at a time, cutting it in with a broad bladed knife. Shape into a round flat cake, roll on a lightly floured board, roll into a sheet. Fit into a nine inch pan, which has been greased. Pink the edges and fill with the peach halves cut side up. Beat eggs until light, add sugar and a sprinkle of nutmeg; pour over peaches and bake in a hot oven for 12 minutes. Reduce heat and cook until peaches are tender, about 30 minutes longer.

PEACH SHORTCAKE

2 cups pastry flour 3 teaspoons baking powder ¾ teaspoon salt 5 tablespoons butter or lard ¾ cup milk

10 peaches ¼ teaspoon nutmeg Sift flour once; measure and add baking powder and salt; sift again into mixing bowl. Cut in shortening with a pastry blender; add milk, cutting in with broad handled knife. Turn on to a slightly floured board and knead very lightly with the tips of the fingers, which must be well floured. Divide dough into halves and roll gently into two rounds not more than ½ inch thick. Fit one round into a well greased round 9-inch dish and brush with softened butter. Put remaining dough on top and bake in hot oven for 20 minutes (400). Reserve some peaches for garnish. Separate halves of shortcake; spread bottom half with softened butter and half of the fruit which has been previously prepared with fruit sugar sprinkling. Put on top, crust down; spread with butter and remaining peaches. Garnish with whipped cream and sliced peaches, and serve with or without sugar and cream.

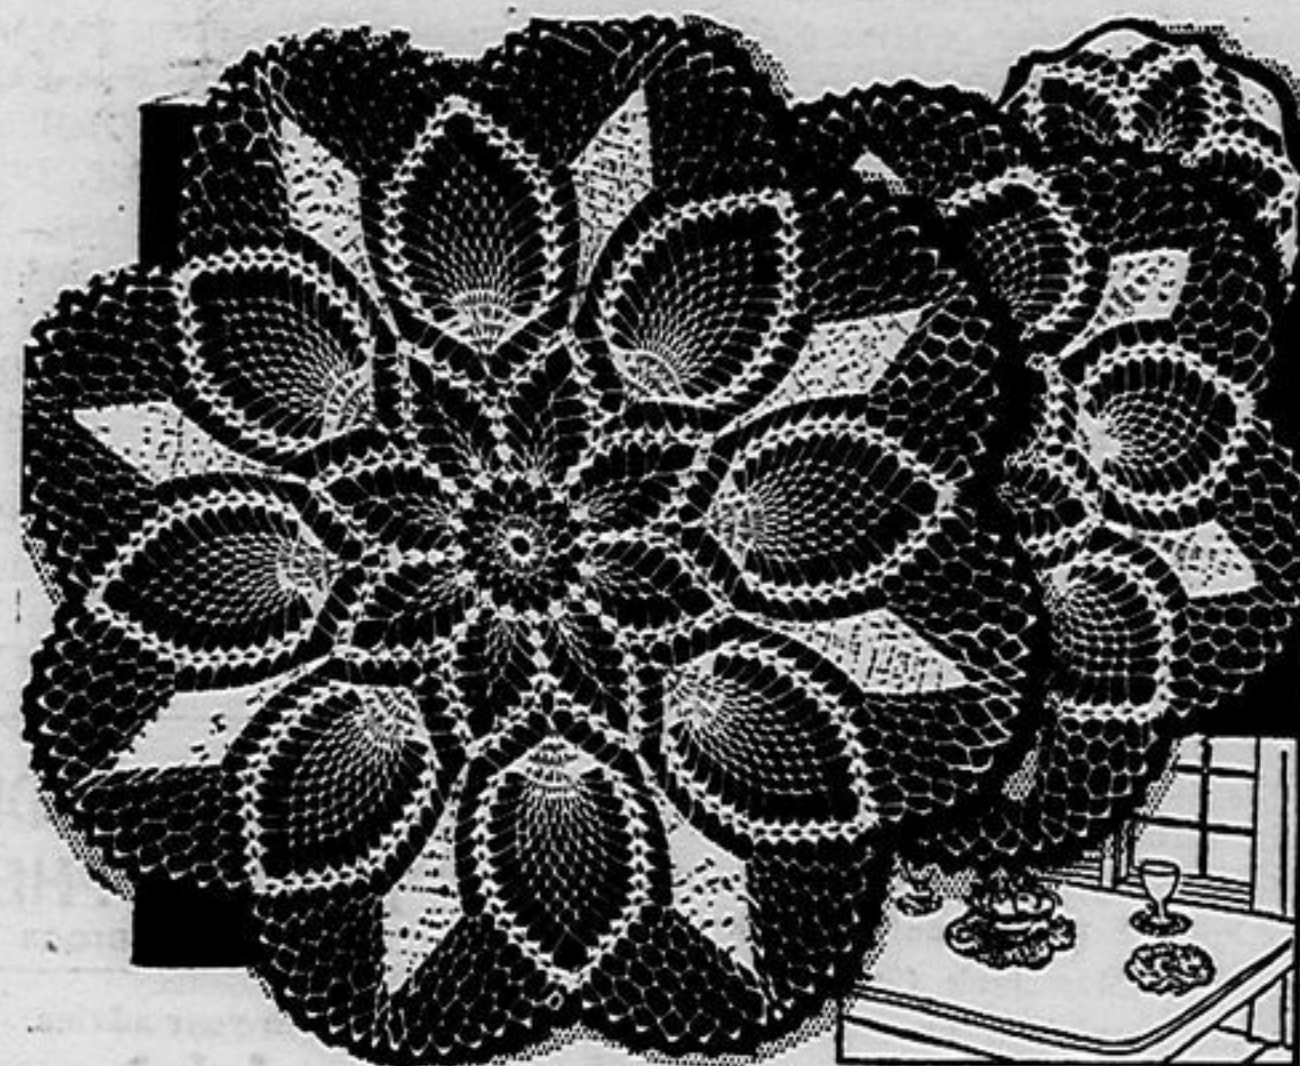

Next week a discussion on canning peaches, jellies and preserves.

shoulders touching, not wasting any breath in speech. The wind had now come up, it flung itself against them, lashing their eyes, tearing the breath from their nostrils. The snow struck in sharp pellets with terrific force.

It seemed to Sally they had endured this torture for hours. The sky was almost black, the tangled brush weighted with deep snow, the tall pines bent in the wind's fury.

Suddenly Corey stopped; he sank down on a log. "Sally," he said, "I think we're lost. We've missed the trail."

3 Million Women Do 85 Per Cent. of Buying in Canada

So Merchandising Experts Say — As Members of Women's Organizations in Dominion They Are Being Accorded Special Representation at the 1940 C.N.E.

Three and a half million Canadian women members of 30 women's organizations with affiliations in cities, towns, and villages in every section of Canada, are being accorded special representation at the Canadian National Exhibition this year.

These three million women, the merchandising experts say, do 85 per cent. of all the buying in Canada. As such, their opinions are not to be taken lightly or their whims easily set aside. Their articulate representatives are comprised of 91 women editors on daily papers from Halifax to Vancouver, and scores of ladies of the press, feature writers, cookery experts, magazine editors, and the like.

Too Much Suntan Harmful To Looks

Damages Beauty In Many Cases; Expert Says Some Women Are Allergic to It

It really isn't smart to suntan to excess. Not only do the doctors say that, but the beauty experts too, this year. Too much tan is out.

"It's a case of some folk being allergic to sunshine," says Ann De-lafield, a New York beauty director. She thinks sun has caused more damage to beauty than anything else in recent years.

IT DRIES THE SKIN

"No woman over 25 should sun tan from the neck up," is Miss De-lafield's admonition. That's because sun dries the skin, resulting in wrinkles. She adds that any woman who is more than 40 who sun-tans her body is adding three years to her looks.

If you still want tan, it's well to sun only about five minutes on your back and five minutes in front each day. The rest of the day stay out of the direct sunlight. Wear a large sunhat, carry a gay parasol or wear a good-looking beach robe.

Glass Garters

In a few years you may not be able to tell whether a girl is wearing garters or not, no matter how short the dresses are, for they will probably be made of elastic glass which will neither bend nor crack, and will at all times be invisible. Braces and belts, too, may be made of the same material. Elastic glass, a recent invention, yields to body pressure, and then resumes its original shape, like ordinary elastic. But unlike elastic, it defies fatigue and does not deteriorate rapidly with wear, will not burn, is unaffected by water, perspiration or alcohol, and cleans easily.
