IN DAYS OF YORE

25 YEARS AGO

(From Review file, October 14, 1915)

May we hope that before the next "dark of the moon" we shall have the hydro lights going on our streets. The public have been waiting, none too patiently, from one date to another and so far waited in vain.

We know everything comes to the man who waits, but let the coming be expedited if possible.

Great Britain, with an eye to economy, would have the nation rise at dawn and go to bed with the birds, thus saving millions now spent on light and fuel in the hours between evening and midnight. It would be simply reviving an ancient custom. In Charles II's time plays were performed by daylight and Samuel

Pepys records, as a matter of course, that at five o'clock in the morning he made a purchase at a bookshop.
