CHAP, IV. CON. Far down the stately avenue Of forest trees, Our hero Jack strode in full view Of enemies, Who crouched in mimic ambush near.

As if to spring; Still on he strode without a fear; Began to sing :-A life in the woods for me,-A home in the forest deep, When the branches waving free,

With the winds their revels keep. The wild bird caged must pine For its happy forest home, That bough and leaf enshrine-

The blue heavens for its dome Once more on the brink I stand Of the deep, swift gliding stream; Farewell, farewell to the land Of dust and scorehing beam!

We'll sport in the forest shade, Like a captured deer unbound: O'er every hill and glade, We'll search the wild-wood round.

The bright sun has sunk 'neath the wave And night has swept down o'er the scene; A song of the wilds we brave Shall rise in the forest green:

And that song of hearts shall be. A tent on the green-hill's side; A life in the woods for me; A home in the forest wide.

Dark faces peered from every bush, With glittering eyes; Seemed eager for a sudden rush A dread surprise. Nell followed close upon his heels, A fierce stag-hound.

Of late she'd missed two of her meals And glowered around. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Brampton Conservative demonstration came off on Friday, and the speakers were Sir John, Dr. Tupper and Woolen Factory. Macdougall. Between three or four thousand people were present, many of whom were Reformers.
