Wonders of the sea.

that live in the sea? In the Indian Ocean, many feet below the surface of the water grow woods quite as luxuriant as any jun gles we read of in South America. Som of the trees grow as high as two house piled on one another. They are called by a hard name-"nerocysten." The roots resemble coral, and from the slender stem grows a cluster of very long leaves. Other trees grow almost as high and end in one single huge leaf that is about the size of Lord Mayo. His Lordship, then Lord Naas, our forest trees. Thus beautiful it is i day; but when night comes on, and you suppose all creatures gone to bed, the landscape grows more lovely still. Little Crabs and medusas light up the sea; the sea-pen quivers with green, phosphoric light; what was brown and red in the day is changed into bright green, yellow moonfish floats like a silvery crescent.

An old and respected citizen of the township of Maryborough, Mr. Thos. Morgan, about sixty-five years old, met his death while drawing a load of tan bark to Stirton on Saturday afternoon. The horses took fright by a portion of the load falling on them, carrying Mr. Morgan with it, causing the team to run away, and Mr. Morgan was thrown under the waggon, the wheels passing over his head and shoulder causing his death in about ten min- To six days of the Week

The bear has a decided antipathy to stringed instruments. This is a fact established IN A SHOE SHOP! long ago as is proved by the following anecdote of no recent date. A Polish fiddler returning from a fair where he had performed his part at a ball, was passing through a forest. Toward midnight, being tired he sat down under a tree, laid his violoncello upon the ground and began to Can't see 'em anywhere else same style. He eat some provisions which he took from his is making them for $7 a pair (cash)—real bag. The odor of the eatables attracted two bears who, to the great alarm of the poor fiddler came and stood before him in an attitude of solicitation far too plain. few minutes had all disappeared, and the bears after having absorbed the dinner, would over and above eat their host. In his terror the unhappy fiddler mechanically took up his instrument and began to play. At the first sounds the bears flew away as fast as possible. The fiddler breathed. "A pleasant journey to you my lively fellows," said he : "If I had known how fond you were of music, I should surely have given you the concert before the dinner."
