The present is the time for the people to decide for themselves, and in accordance with their well understood wishes their representatives will feel bound to act. It is not a next year, that, had they known better, their guard. they would have acted differently. Kars is said to have fallen through treachery of a pasha, who admitted the Russians to the principal fort, being paid for it. This tale is one which should be received with caution, as although the corruption amongst Turkish pashas lays them open to such a charge against one of their number, it would be manifestly in the interest of the Constantinople authorities that the populace should believe that the stronghold fell through treachery rather than weakness. The news from Europe confirms the opinion that the Russians are very strongly established around Plevna, and makes it more probable that not only will the place fall Ghazi Osman's army will be captured with it .- Montreal Witness.
