The Gold-Fish Trick.

Several of the magicians who perform in public do what they call "the gold-fish trick." The juggler stands upon the stage throws a handkerchief over his ex tended arm, and produces, in succession three or four shallow glass dishes filled to the brim with water, in which live gold fish are swimming. Of course the dishes are concealed somehow upon the person of the performer.

Peter Lamb, the young fellow who lives near me, discovered how the trick done, and he offered to do it the other night at Magrader's party, for the entertainment of the company. So the folks all gathered in one end of the parlor, and in a few minutes Lamb entered the door at the other end. He said :

"Ladies and gentlemen, you will perceive that I have nothing about me excep my ordinary clothing, and yet I shall produce presently two dishes filled with water and living fish. Please watch me narrowly."

Then Peter flung the handkerchief over his hand and arm, and we could see that he was working very vigorously at some thing beneath it. He continued for some appear. Then he began to grow very red in the face, and we saw that something was the matter. Then the perspiration began to stand in beads upon Peter's forehead, and Mr. Magruder asked him if he was well. Then the company laughed and the magician grew redder. But kept on fumbling beneath that handkerchief, and apparently trying to reach heard something snap, and the next mo wizard's left leg, and spread out over the carpet. By this time he looked as if the grave would be a welcome refuge. But still he continued to feel around under the handkerchief. At last another snap was heard, and another quart of water plunged down the trowser of his left leg, and formed a pool about his shoe. Then the necromancer hurriedly said that the experiment had failed, somehow, and he darted into the dining-room. I followed him, and found him sitting on a sofa, trying to remove his pantaloons. He exclaimed:

"Oh, gosh! Come here quick, and pull these off! They're soaking wet, and I've fifteen live gold-fish inside my drawers, flippin' around, and raspin' the skin with their fins enough to set a man craxy. Ouch! Oh, Moses! Hurry that shoe off, and grab that fish there at my left knee, or I'll have to howl right out!"

Then we undressed him, and picked the fish out of his clothes, and I discovered that he had two dishes filled with water, and covered with India-rubber tops, strapped inside of his trowsers behind. In his struggles to get at them, he had torn the covers to rags. We fixed him up a pair of Magruder's trowsers which were six inches flight of stairs or is raised quickly to place the very best illustrated magazines published. Its too short for him, and then he climbed over the back fence and went home. He says, now, that the next time he gives exhibitions in public, he intends to confine himself to ventriloquism.
