TO HAVE AN A Horse Renovaters.

I may here say a word on another peculiar business of Paris: -Horse renova tors. It would perhaps be more correct to say horse restorers, but the business is the same. Twice a week in that usually quiet Boulevard de l'Hospital you will hear tumultuous outeries and loud voices like the shouts of a charging squadron of cuirassiers. These noises come from man and The whole assemblage 13 more like an insane asylum let loosse. The groups of horses are like excited poverty out for an orgie. This is the locality of stables that are hermetically sealed to the vulgar eyes of those on "shank's mare," or even on a conceited 'high horse. You hear the noises at least. By a ruse you may get in. It has an equine sanitarium. Old faded horses, minus any "go', in them, are taken to this retreat, and by a special food, composed principally of carots crushed and mixed with bran, to which a little flavoring of arsenic is given, these all, who try to solve this enigma, has seen quiet quadrupeds become fiery steeds.
