I regret the degradation which popular and political government has assumed of late days. I regret the suggestions that have been made that all is fair in politics. regret the doctrine that there is one standard of political and another of social and personal morality. I know no such disfinction, Sir. I believe that the man who will play you false in politics, who will misstate a case in order to injure an opponent in a political campaign, will play you false in private life. (Loud cheers.) I desire to see political government fulfil its true function of being the educator and the clevator of the social and political standard. I do not desire to see it tend to degrade that standard. I believe that these are the views of you, too, gentlemen. (Cheers.) I believe that you recognize the mportant situation. I believe that you recognize the fact that a man whom you have had opportunities of knowing for four and thirty years, who during that occupied exalted and responsible situations, the duties of which he has been discharging friends, to ask your endorsement of his conduct.
