POETRY. For the Review.

> Omnipotence. Loud and strong the zephyr blows, Wheree or whither no one knows, An allusion most ornate. That the power of God is great That the winds he can control. Make them stoop to Precept's goal All the elements combined Listen His commands to mind

Greater still the orb of day With its strong and scorehing ray Crossing with incessant march Heaven's own high pelucid arch; Day by day and year by year Does this great and potent sphere From His bright illumed shrine, Show to mortals power divine Power unfathomed so immense

Yet this power is our defence. Our defence through life's career Till we reach a higher sphere ; Then again this power I'll know, In that land unstained by foe, If we've grasp'd by God's control Faith, the turquoise of the soul Faith aspires the soul to span, That abyss no eye can scan, Dark, mystic, hid futurity. Faith with eagle eye can see; 'Tis all done by magic might, By the power of Infinite;

Oh, Omnipotent above Lead me to the shrine of love Thou omnipotent, Benign, Wake this dormant soul of mine, That I may without appal Stand, tho' trembling worlds should fall That, although within my heart. Death should drive his cruel dart, I might stand with my defence, Trusting in Omnipotence.
