ing, and all kinds of hardware.
"What a dreary, grey day!" said Lady Rosamond, sauntering towards the window
"Do let me go into the school-room, Lucy, and I'll promise to behave myself properly."
"This was the last straw, and Mrs. Ever-leigh 'spoke with her tongue."
"Rosamond," she said in a voice that trembled with suppressed indignation, "I will not you persecute Edna Westyn." When you came here she and Mr. Vale were lovers in all but name; a little while, and they would have made each other happy for life. But you stepped in and spoiled everything."
As these words the faint color deepened in Lady Rosamond's cheeks. She turned round with unusual quickness and faced her cousin.

POETRY
