But when Marcia had emptied the better part of her hennery into the great poultry show, one felt it necessary to go and look after her interests there, and she sold enough of the common stock left at home to pay the expenses of herself and Bessie in the city. Her mother burst into tears with the thought of the vulgar pursuits of ier daughters.

It was a fine thing, that show, as Marcia said, trusting Bessie could make out what she said in the riot of the chanticleers, each rivalling his unseen opponent. "Just hear the rumpus those roosters keep up!" she cried. And what with the cackling of the eese, the quacking of the ducks, the gobbling of the turkeys, the clatter of the guinea-fowl, the cooing of the pigeons, and the screams of the peacocks, the rumpus was that of Pandemonium itself. "I heard what you said, Phil," she contrived to say directly, "and I have a proposition to make to you. See here"as he turned to her with a stare of utter amazement in his handsome eyes. "Look at this list of premiums-I've taken twenty. And every one of my birds is sold, some at ten and some at fifteen dollars a pair, just as the secretary chose.
