

Fatal Affray in London.

A fracas occurred at the Grigg House, London, on Wednesday evening, which has resulted in the death of Frank L. Gundlach, representative of a commercial agency. The particulars of the affair are as follows:—It seems that Frank L. Gundlach, who has been there for the past three weeks on business connected with the Dominion Reporting and Collecting Agency of Montreal, stopping at the Grigg House, in the evening, and was about to go to his room, when he was accosted by a young man named Drought, who was standing at the counter in company with several others. Drought is an entry clerk in a wholesale firm there, and appears to have been partly intoxicated. He addressed Gundlach in offensive language, inquiring if he was one of the Liliputian troupe. Gundlach said "No." Then Drought asked him if he did not belong to the troupe that had just been playing at the Opera House—the Rente people. Gundlach disclaimed any connection with them. "Oh, then," continued Drought, "I guess you are a mercantile agency man," at the same time tendering a card. To this Gundlach replied that if he had business to transact with him, his office hours were between nine and four. He tried to withdraw, but Drought uttering some offensive phrase, said to be obscene, Gundlach said, "D— you have insulted me," and struck him in the face. Drought drew a short ebony cane and struck his opponent on the side of the head, just behind the temple. The combatants were immediately separated. Gundlach went up to his room holding his hand to his head. On the landing he met Mr. Grigg and told him of the occurrence, saying he had been insulted and struck in his house. Nothing more serious was thought of the case till this morning, when Gundlach was found on the floor of his room senseless, where he appears to have fallen out of bed. All efforts to rouse him were futile, and though life still remained, to all appearance, he was dead. Six or seven physicians were in attendance all day, but without producing any change in the condition of the injured man. The cause of the trouble was effusion of blood on the brain, induced by a rupture of an artery. Drought was arrested during the day, and appeared overwhelmed with grief over what he had done, saying he must have been intoxicated, as he had no recollection of striking the blow. Gundlach is said to have been well connected in Montreal. He has been regarded as a sort of theatrical character, associating with members of that fraternity and claiming to write for a New York sporting paper. His friends have been telegraphed for. Wednesday night he occupied a double-bedded room with Mr. F. H. Gilmore, of Port Hope, who was the first to discover him in the morning. Gundlach died at six o'clock Thursday evening.
