or nothing. (a) A unique picture drawn from certain aspects of life. Life is full of the comic and the droll; and when viewed with a keen eye to the ludicrous, it may be set forth with graphic, if not with satirical effect as in the ode written in the spirit of quaint humor-

Three wise old men were they, were they, Who went to walk on a winter day. One carried a club to dig for pickles; One wore an ulster to keep off prickies; The third, and he was the wisest one, To kill the mosquitoes, carried a gou.

"Oh, dear !" cried one, "the so wise women I see The only chance for our lives is to flee!" So they ran till they reached the great North Poles And up the ste inniest way they stole ; But high at the top sat a polar bear, Which filled the three wise men with despair.

One used his club for a parachute ; One from the stock of his gun did shoot; The third, in the ulster, fainted away, And there he'd have lain to this very day If the three old women had not appeared And found them all more hurt than skeered. Oue fanted the ulster into life, For which he gladly made her his wife; One caught the club man on her ladder-"I was hard to tell which felt the madder; And the third, before he had time to ask it. Carried the sportsman off in her basket.

Where the Toys Come From.

Toys and playthings are in continual demand wherever there are children to be amused, and the supply grows larger and which gladden little hearts in English nurseries come from Germany, and the quaint old town of Nuremburg is the centre of that kind of industry, which employs many hands, and keeps the grim wolf of poverty from the door of many an industrious household. Thence come the wooden boxes containing villages, gardens, sheepfolds and Noah's arks; the grocer's, baker's and butcher's shops, which form such delightful Christmas and birthday presents; the cube puzzles, with pictures on each face of the blocks of wood which fit so neatly into their boxes; the jointed dolls, now almost out of date; the substantial looking horses and carts ; and, last of all, the mechanical work, and perform such extraordinary manceuvres that one almost fancies them alive. The tiny lamps, the bright reflectors, and shining balls, which render our Christmas trees so brilliant, are also imported from Germany, as well as the ornamental and useful articles made of horn, bone and lacquered ware, whichmake such capital presents for those folks which have out-grown the delight of dolls and wooden animals. The Swiss peasants who in summer time find plenty of employment in tending their cows and goats, gathering the basket of A!pine strawoerries that are piled up in great disines on every hotel table, and all sorts of services for the great army of tourists who come annually to make a peaceful invasion of their levely land are frequently snowed up in the chatlets and mountain villages for weeks together in the winter, and employ the long hours in cutting out bears from sieces of beechwood, often with no other tool than a strong knife, making wooden nut crackers, match-boxes, and the curious fitted boxes, and are universally bought by travellers as mementoes of happy helidays among the mountains.

THE MONTIJO FAMILY. - Early in the present century Mr. Kirkpatrick, a cadet of an Just honorable Scotch family, with a pedigree abnormally long even for the land o' cakes, was appointed Consul at Malaga, and his daughter, a young lady pessessing physical and in tellectual gifts of a very high order, became the wife of a Spanish noble, Count de Montijo, her inferior in everything but rank and money. This is the venerable lady whose death has just taken place. The Countess very soon showed that she was destined to play a prominent part in social lite, and the tongue of scandal did not fail to attack her. Stories to her discredit were recalled at the time of her daughter Eugine's mariage to Louis Napoleon. She became a thorough Spaniard, and continued aimost to the last a prominent leader of society.
