> SIR ISAAC NEWTON .- His physical appearance at any rate has been preserved to descriptions. He seems to have united, in an unusual degree, brightness of eye with serenity of face, a combination that suggests keenness of interest without restlessness, and repose without apathy. He was simple in his modes of life, and for the most part solitary. He had an immense power of abstracting himself from his immediate nose or shirt in hand, and only when the problem was solved would it occur to him he made bold to carve a fowl, and replaced the cover on the remains.
