A Big Bear Story.

THE THRILLING ADVENTURE OF A FATHER AND SON IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

(Emoy, B.C. Inland Sentinel, July 22.)

Alexander Embree and his son Walter are living together on the old gent's farm, about one and a half miles from the Westworth station, on the New Annan road.

A fortnight ago, while father and son were standing in the field, Mr. Embree noticed the sheep running, and, on looking toward the foot of the mountain, he saw an enormous bear crouching and slowly creeping towards his horses, which were feeding on the hillside.

He immediately sent his son for a gun and in a few minutes the latter returned, the bear was within twenty feet of one of the horses, and evidently about to spring upon the unsuspecting animal.

Mr. Embree was now about sixty yards from the bear, which, on perceiving that he was observed, sat up, and, as soon as Mr. Embree fired, sprang forward, rolled over, and then ran away.

The dog followed him, the father and son keeping on the trail by the bloody track left and the sound of the dog up the steep and difficult hillside, it being almost impossible to get through the windfalls and brush in some places.

They had, however, only gone about a mile or so when they heard the dog returning with the bear on his own track.

On standing still for a few moments the bear came within forty feet, apparently raging mad. For a moment the dog checked him, and Mr. Embree fired at what he supposed to be the back of his shoulder, but it proved to be the brute's enormous head, and he only struck him on the lower jaw, breaking off a part of the jaw and one lower tusk and a part of the tusk on the other side, and that no doubt saved their lives.

Mr. Embree instantly loaded again, but when the monster sprang upon him the cap failed to explode. He then used the gun over the brute's head, the second blow missing only the hair in his hand, and that seemed to produce no more effect than a riding whip in the hands of a child.

At this point in the conflict the bear pushed hard upon his foe, when a log from behind Mr. Embree tripped him, and he fell backward with the monster upon him.

The bear was about taking Mr. Embree's head or face in his mouth, when the latter thrust his right hand into the bear's mouth, and caught the roof of his tongue, but unfortunately his arm coming out across the animal's mouth, the monster shut it upon the arm, and crushed both bones; in the man's own words, "as easily as you would break a pipestem."

The son now came to his rescue by dealing the brute a tremendous blow on the side of the head with the axe, but the monster's skin was so thick that it only made a small dent. Leaving the father with his mangled and helpless arm, the bear turned upon the son.

He first struck the axe, knocking it about thirty feet out of the young man's hand, and then seizing him by one knee, "shook him," says the father, "as a bull terrier would a rat, throwing him, with one shake, nearly ten feet." Without even a knife, the father sprang upon the back of the bear, and thus diverted the bear from his son. Twice this dreadful game was played turn about by father and son, each in his turn attacking the bear to save the other's life.

While they were under the bear he held them down with his front feet, and tried to tear them with his hind feet, but it was too long and only tore the earth under them. The final struggle was fearful. The bear had the young man underneath him, and in an attempt to crush his head between his enormous jaws, for the want of the lower tusks he was only able to tear the flesh from his forehead down over his eyes, and holding the skin of his forehead and eyebrows in his front teeth, shook the young man violently. At this moment the old man caught sight of the axe, and taking it in his left hand began to strike at the bear's head, the axe often coming close to his son's face in the deadly struggle, and after having given the brute ten blows from the axe with one hand, the bear released his hold from the son's face, and fell, from a blow between his eye and ear, dead, upon the bleeding body of the young man, who during the last struggle held a firm grip of the bear's tongue. And now the father, with one finger bitten off and his right arm crushed, had to help his wounded son get home, the latter having both knees fearfully mangled, and his face lacerated and torn.

The writer visited the sufferers on Sabbath evening, and found them, under the judicious treatment of Dr. McDonald, doing very well indeed, though they will not be able to work this spring on their farm. The father is an old bear hunter, but he never saw so large a bear before. From his hind feet to the top of his head was eight feet, so that when he stood up he was quite out of his reach. His skin was fifty pounds, and his foot was five inches across the heel, and eight inches long. Never did father and son show more pluck in defending each other from a fearful death. The first shot the bear passed right through the bear's liver, lungs, and within two inches of his heart, carrying away part of the shoulder blade on its way. The Indians say the bear must have been about twelve years old.

A ruffian lately walked into a bank in Detroit, knocked down the clerk, who happened to be alone, with a bludgeon, and walked off with between $4,500 and $5,000.

A New Winter Port.

Two hundred years ago, Tadoussac was the trading place for the Old and New Worlds.

It was there CARTER landed in 1535, and that the early colonists established their great maritime port. Basse, Breton, and Norman vessels came there to trade in peltries, and it was the rendezvous also of the whaling fleet, for in those days, according to the Relations, the whale was found far up the river. A proposition is now before the Quebec Government, which, if acted upon, may restore to this old station its former commercial supremacy.

The Quebec people without respect of party, are anxious to open up and test the Lake St. John route as a colonization district; and a railway from some point on the St. Lawrence to the lake is talked of. Pater Lacasse, a well-known G. M. missionary, who has passed his life in the Territories he speaks of, has just issued a little work on the subject; and the newspapers seem to think that this scheme will be adopted. Briefly stated, it is as follows: He proposes to build from Bastien, or some point on the North Shore railway near it, to Lake Tortue, this route affording an easy passage through the Laurentides; thence to Lake Edward and along the Ontario-Chicoutimi to St. Prime in the Lake St. John Valley; thence by the north of the lake to St. Anne, opposite Chicoutimi, and thence to Tadoussac.

The length of the route is 320 miles; and Tadoussac is 93 miles nearer Liverpool than Halifax, and 387 miles nearer to it than Portland. The building of this road, as M. Lacasse says, would complete the transcontinental system and make Tadoussac the eastern terminus of the Pacific railway.

Everything depends, however, upon its suitability as a winter port, and on this point Pater Lacasse has no doubt. The winds and currents carry the ice formed in the Saguenay, at the mouth of which Tadoussac stands, and along the north shore, right across the river to the south shore; and Tadoussac harbor is always clear from floes. Thus the seal hunters have no difficulty in traversing the north shore from Tadoussac to Seven Islands in bark canoes in the depth of winter. M. Lacasse says he has passed up and down this part of the river in a boat in every month of winter; and in the hardest weather of January and February has stood on the cliffs and looked out upon a broad, open channel. The harbour of Tadoussac is eminently safe one, winter and summer; the Saguenay being free from ice for fifteen miles above the village. The question is one of great importance to the whole country, and the result of the investigations of the Quebec Government will be looked for with interest. —Toronto Mail.
