Hydrophobia said to be Cured

From the Country Gentleman.

I can give some facts which may be of use to somebody, thereby saving life. The time between the biting of an animal by a mad dog and showing signs of hydrophobia is not less than nine days, but may be nine After the animal has become rabid, a bite or scratch of the teeth upon a person, or slobber coming in a sore or raw place, would produce hydrophobia just as soon as though he had been bitten by a mad dog. Hydrophobia can be prevented, and I will give what is well known to be an infallible remedy, if proparly administered, for man or beast. A duse for a horse or cow should be about four times as great as for a person. It is not too late to give medicine any time before the spasms come on.

The first dose for a person is one and a half ounces of elemcampane root, bruised, put in a pint of new milk, reduced to one half by boiling, then taken all at one dose in the morning, fasting until afternoon, or at least a very light diet after several hours have elapsed. The second dose same as first, except take two ottness of the root; third dose the same as the last, to be taken every other day. Three doses are all that is needed, and there need be no fear. This I know from my own experience, and know of a number of other cases where it has been entirely successful. This is not guess work. Those persons alluded to were bitten by their own dogs, and were penned up to see if they would go mad. They did go mad, and did bite the persons.

This remedy has been used in and about Philadelphia for forty years and longer, with great success, and is known as the Goodman remedy. I am acquainted with a physician who told me he had used it more than thirty years, but never knew a case that failed where it was properly administered. Among other cases he mentioned one where a number of cows had been bitten by a mad dog. To half of this number they administered this remedy, to the other half not. The latter all died of hydrophobia, while those who took the elecampane and milk showed no signs of that disease.

(Elecampane grows very abundantly in some sections in this country and is a very useful herb.—Ed.)

The Princess of Wales is a picture of modest good taste as sho walks the deck of her husband's yacht. She always wears here a plainly made dress of some dark color, with a sailer's hat, or a close soft hat, which is exceedingly becoming to her. Her little daughters are dressed in dark sergas or simple cottons, and sailor's huts always grown their long, fair hair.

The natural color of flowers may be altered, according to C. Puscher, by exposing them to the diluted fumes of ammonia Most of the blue, violet, and light crimson flowers turn to a splendid bright green. Dark crimson clove pinks turn black, other dark red flowers turn dark violet; all white flowers turn sulphuryellow. This change of color is especially beautiful when the flowers are variegated or the single petals possess a different color. As soon as the new color is fully developed, the flowers must be dipped attonce in cold water, when they will keep their new shade for two or six hours; by degrees then their natural color returns. Blue violets red asters are dyed or turned intense red when they are exposed to the fumesof muriatic acid gas; it takes from two to four hours, or more, before the shade is fully developed. The flowers are then removed to dark, cool rooms to dry.
