

Thunder Bay Affairs.
MAGNIFICENT DISCOVERY OF SILVER NEAR PIGEON RIVER.

Thunder Bay, Aug. 26, 1880.—From the reports and stories current among the Indians in the habit of frequenting country in the vicinity of Pigeon River, which forms the international boundary line to the south of us, it has long been suspected that there was some where in that region a very rich deposit of native silver. These rumors became a settled fact when a number of years ago some Indians brought to the McKellar Brothers exceedingly rich specimens of native silver. The Indians at the same time were requested to procure additional specimens from the place where these first products were taken, and they left promising to do so. In two days' time they returned from the direction of Pigeon River with a quantity of native silver of such exceeding richness as to make the discovery of the deposit very desirable; but all efforts at the time to get these Indians to point it out proved unavailing. Ever since then the McKellar Brothers have given a good deal of attention to the country west of this in the hope of being so fortunate as to come across the spot; but their personal exertions were without success, as an old explorer named McNamara, is the fortunate discoverer of the bonanza. It seems that this person succeeded during the most of last winter an Indian, who dropped hints from time to time to him of his knowledge of this long sought for bed of ore, and after much urging, McNamara, in conjunction with a Frenchman, Perrean, got the Indian to point out the spot which is in the direction of Pigeon River, and which is, from all the evidences, immensely rich in native silver. It seems that McNamara was assisted by a man whose father picked it up just after a bullet had clipped it from Hancock's coat. The poor fellow had started to the pawn shop. I let him have $10 on it.

"What, boy," exclaimed another man, entering the store and holding up a brass button. "Here's a relic for you, shot from Gen. Hancock's coat during the battle of Gettysburg."

"Say, there," said a man looking through the door way, "do you fellows want to see a relic of the late war, shot—"

"I've got one that'll beat it," said a man, stooping and feeling in his vest pocket. "Hold on dar," said a colored man. "Lemme show yer de boss curiasity. Hit's a button got offin—"

"Oh, let us," exclaimed several voices, while the noise of buttons rolling on the floor was heard. "Let's look for that fellow," said the first victim. "Why, bust my buttons, someone must have drawn on Hancock with a double barreled shot gun."

The party went out, and the only information learned of him was that he had just cut the buttons from an old army coat and started for the next town.

The Car is bound to wed the Princess Dolgorouky; that is regarded as certain. The Princess was his mistress for some years before the death of the Empress. She was in the Winter Palace at the time of the nihilist powder plot. His dalliance with her saved his life on that occasion, for it made him late to dinner and left the powder to explode under an empty room. On Dolgorouky's account the Car banished his dying Empress, and had a bitter quarrel with his son and heir. On her account he has risked unnumbered nihilist dangers. He wears a coat of mail, travels in ironclad railway cars, and seems insane with fear sometimes, but he trembles more on Dolgorouky's account than he does on his own. Now that the Empress is out of the way, the Car has determined to marry his mistress. A marriage "with the left hand" would hardly signify a change in their relations; and as the Car is anxious to make the Princess Dolgorouky not only his wife, but his Empress, it is whispered about the Court that he will presently marry her in state. What complications this scandalous marriage may lead to, by estranging the rest of the Imperial family and bringing the Russian nation to a realization of the shame and disgrace to which its autocratic institutions have brought it, no one can tell. Naturally the people are watching the proceedings of the amorous monarch with anxious eyes.

THEY HAD ALL HAD IT.—A health officer writes to a Canadian medical journal as follows: "Inspected a house in the country at the request of the attending physician, as the general health of the family had been bad for a long time, they having suffered from a class of complaints that would indicate bad drainage, etc. Found under the floor a wooden drain with rotten cover, and soil saturated with sewage; trap on water-closet non-effective; water-closet foul; situation very bad; ventilation so arranged as to poison the room above it, a sleeping apartment occupied by a young man suffering for a long time from general ill health. No trap on kitchen sink; water supply, etc. connected directly with the sewer with out traps in the over-flow pipe. On my reporting the latter fact to the family, and expressing my surprise that they had not all had typhoid fever, they exclaimed in chorus, 'Oh, we have all had it.'"

A Relic of the American Civil War.
From the Little Rock Gazette.

Yesterday a well dressed man—but this is not a fashion article; what's the use of describing a man's dress? Anyway, the man entered a store, and taking a brass button from his pocket he handed it to a bystander, and remarked:—"Rather a valuable relic. This button was shot from Gen. Hancock's coat at the battle of Gettysburg. My father was one of Hancock's staff, and picked up the button when it fell from the General's coat."

"I should think that it was valuable," said the man examining it. "From Hancock's coat? Well, I declare. What'll you take for it? Excuse me, sir, I should not have asked such a silly question."

"No offense, sir. I wouldn't sell the relic, of course, as it is bound to me by more than one tie. My father is dead," and the man looked away while the other party turned and made foreign remarks to a boy that stood by the counter lazily turning the leaves of a lot of sheet music. "No, I wouldn't sell it," continued the man, "but as I am in strained circumstances, I am going to pawn it."

"Don't do that. Let me take it," said the man who had a similar curiosity. "Well, loan me $5."

The money was handed over, and after the relic man had carefully taken down the address of the capitalist he walked out. A few minutes afterward the clerk in a neighboring store entered and exclaimed: "See here, fellows; I reckon I've got the boss relic—a button shot from Gen. Hancock's coat at the battle of Gettysburg."

He then unwrapped a lot of oil paper from around a brass button.

"Where did you get it?" asked the man who had a similar curiosity. "I got it from a man whose father picked it up just after a bullet had clipped it from Hancock's coat. The poor fellow had started to the pawn shop. I let him have $10 on it."

"What, boy," exclaimed another man, entering the store and holding up a brass button. "Here's a relic for you, shot from Gen. Hancock's coat during the battle of Gettysburg."

"Say, there," said a man looking through the door way, "do you fellows want to see a relic of the late war, shot—"

"I've got one that'll beat it," said a man, stooping and feeling in his vest pocket. "Hold on dar," said a colored man. "Lemme show yer de boss curiasity. Hit's a button got offin—"

"Oh, let us," exclaimed several voices, while the noise of buttons rolling on the floor was heard. "Let's look for that fellow," said the first victim. "Why, bust my buttons, someone must have drawn on Hancock with a double barreled shot gun."

"Castorine" Machine Oil is warranted to give satisfaction.—1125.
Our farmers and orchardists will do well to give more attention to the winter varieties of apples, for there promises to be an ever-increasing market in Britain.
G. C. McFarlane, Lower Town, and J. H. Hunter, Upper Town, Durham, keep the genuine "Castorine" Machine Oil.—1125.
Ten thousand English miners are annually injured by accidents, and 800 of these die. In Prussia the mortality is much higher, a life being sacrificed for every 70, 451 tons of coal raised, while in England the proportion is only one in every 80, 419.
Try Burdock Blood Bitters.
This is a system renovator, blood and liver syrup, acts on the bowels, liver and kidneys, and is a superb tonic.—1123.
Princess Louise has been forwarded to Thomas Banfield, a blind patient at the General Hospital, Toronto, six columns of the writings of St. Matthew, Mark Luke and John in raised type, for the use of the blind. The present was procured on the occasion of the first Vice-Royal visit to this city.
For Reapers, Mowers, and Thrashing Machines see Castorine Machine Oil. For sale by G. C. McFarlane, Lower Town, and J. H. Hunter's General Store, Durham.—1123.
It is not easy to get altogether used to the notion—although it is perhaps merely prejudice that makes it seem irrelevant—
—that Jerusalem is fast becoming, if not a "winter place," a "winter resort" in the sense of Nice or Monaco. The Marquis de Bute, whose vast wealth, and whose devotion to the church of Rome, are equally famous, has a villa for the winter upon the Mount of Olives. A generation ago this announcement, truly, would have sounded more strangely than it sounds today; yet even today what a curious statement it seems. The continental country has brought about many remarkable changes, but perhaps there has been an ecogate incident, since the time of Richard and Saladin, likely to provoke more feeling than that of the Marquis de Bute, together with the renascence of his colonial fortune, will probably give fresh currency to a rumor more than once bruited before.

THE Greatest Popularity of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is where it has the most effect. It cannot detract from its merits. It is the only reliable remedy for all bowel complaints incident to the summer season.—1123.
