POETRY

Of all the names that girls may bear I like plain Kate the best; It has a clear, substantial air,

So unlike all the rest.

A girl of souse is she;

And some, again, are not ;

Some Kates are very good, we know,

So we will scan them, con and pro,

The first we meet's Miss Edu-Kate,-

She points the way to Wisdom's gate,

And choose from out the lot.

And makes the mind to see.

And higher leads us on :

But never with the con.

Untiuthful, shuffling lass -

To cavil and evade the truth

Seems her great aim, alas!

We'll quickly pass her on;

She is a gossip great;

(In joyfulness or wee)

But, honest-hearted Kate,

We all, at times, must bow to her,

For tidings she hath brought us,

Whose heart is in her home :

And seldom far would roam :

She is a fond, warm-hearted girl,

And we have cause to thank her;

And 'mongst the pros we rank her.

Miss Vindi-Kate next meets our sight

We have a wholesome I we f r her,

And claims our admiration;

She justifies the cause of Right,

And greatly we res cet her;

As human rights' protector.

Miss Rusti-Kate's a simple lass

That little honey-laden

An untaright country maiden,

Who's seen but little of the world -

We call her rade and plain, yet we

She holds a charm which ne'er can be

This is the Kate I love the best,

And this is why I love her.

We set her down among the pros.

Avenging deviation ;

Her joy and care, her pleasure's there,

And rank her con and pro.

Domesti-Kate's a quiet girl,

She is a very gem-a pearl,

We'll not detain her-lot her go.

We'll set her down against the pro.

Communi-Kate would next appear,

She brings us good news-sometimes bad,

She teaches and instructs in youth,

So we must rank her with the pro.

We ought to remember that we never gave a bonus for a broad gauge. So far as my memory serves me we gave a bonus of $37,000 for a narrow gauge, and we are only now asked for help to a broad gauge after having been creditably served by the narrow gauge for some eight years, under almost insurmountabl difficulties. We may talk about mismanagement as we choose.
