And the legend runs, that a healthy goat, of the William persuasion, arose betimes the next morning to look for the early worm, After eating up all the tomato cans, barrel Machine Oils, staves, and broken crockery ware, he found the string and took that as a dessert. As soon as the cord was drawn taut, the goat stood up on his hind legs and gave the cord an impulsive jerk. The girl awoke. The goat gave another sudden pull and the maiden jumped out of bed with a smothered cry of pain. Then she stopped down to detach the cord just as the ridiculous French Vinegar, beast gave another violent jerk, and she lost her equilibrium-and nearly lost her toe in the bargain, the cord cutting into the tender flesh. She sprang to the window and called out in a hoarse whisper. "Stop pulling, Charles, I'll be down in a minute." Then she made another effort to untie the cord, but the persistent goat made several angry bobs with his head, and each time, the girl gave a cry of pain. Again she shortly called out in darkness :

"Charles, if you don't stop jerking that DRUG way, I'll not come down at all!"

She was answered by another savage pull, and the cry of anguish that broke from her lips brought her mother into the room, with a look of affright and a lighted lamp. The young lady fainted, the elope-ways keeping poverty from your door.
