POETRY

Find Something to Do. Though you oft may be busy With fancy's gay flowers, Don't sit with hands folded And waste the glad hours; To make life the fairer And pleasure pursue,

In all times and places Find something to do. Though you may not be gifted With language or song, Though you may not be able To move the great throng, You may lighten some spirit

Whose pleasures are few,

For something to do. You may dig in the highway Or sail on the sea Forto laboris honor Whate'er the work be. You will value the sunshine

And find your life better

And love the shade too (Or my pretty fair daughter,-And she may love you!) If wealth be your portion, Then give and be glad,

Then make it your life-work To succor the sad. If poor, then my brother, You never will rue That you, 'mid life's trials, Have something to do. Then the way to be happy

And foster good health-Though one may not go far on The high road to wealth, While striving to banish The false from the true-Is to have a clear conscience With plenty to do.
