POETRY

In Memorium.

Consolatory lines addressed to Mr. and Mrs bildren, Elizabeth Hope, Mary Ann and Lydia Death swooped from his cloud-hidden syrie,

And snatched from your embrace These budding flowers-these household fairles In childhood's early grace.

No flower too lovely for his visit-No form too fair can be-Does he delight in pain, or is it Love which we cannot see?

In childood's early day, Ere came the strife of toil and duty. Your joy-stars passed away. Yet may ye find some healing token

Of wisdom, love and truth,

In the bright dawn of youthful beauty,

Although the cord of life be broken In early hopeful youth. Weep not for those whom Christ hath folded Safe from earth's weary strife; Tis ours by conflict to be Theirs to inherit life. They are not lost, they pass before us; They set again to rise : Their memory beamoth calmly o'er us, Like stars in wintry skies.

Weep not-your loved; they, early dying, Are saved from many woes . They may not know the pain and sighing Which lengthened years disclose.

These plants, too frail for earthly garden. In Heaven's bright balmy air, Where Love is Joy's unsleeping warden, Shall golden frutage bear.

Our love for those whom God has taken Is cleansed from selfish stain : By time undimmed, by storms unshaken, Will pure and strong remain,

When darkly fall the shades of even,

And death draws nigh, we'll find, We have more friends beloved in Heaven Than earth retains behind. Your dead, like golden chains, shall bind you To those immortal shores In which they rest, till death reminds you

That Heaven is also yours! FRANK WELLESLEY PORTUR. Mtchell, Jan. 23rd, 1881.

As the voyage of life was begun. More firmly, each heart to the other was bound, As each pledge to our love had been given : And Gileads balm was applied to the wound, When one was transplanted to heaven.

O'er the calm ripling waters we glided along. No sorrow nor care seemed to fear ; Yet the deep, distant roll of the thunder was heard And how startling it fell on the ear. We saw the storm deepen, and gather around, And we felt the reality now,

Of the deep rolling surge, with its murmuring sound While the billows broke over our bow. O'er the deep heaving waters while struggling along. As we earnestly best to the oar ; The cry of the Bridegroom at midnight was heard, And my loved one was with me no more.

Mr. Rymal-You don't know what I am going to say. The ill-gotten gains which the syndicate, through the wickedness of the Government, are enabled to distribute in order to-what? Corrupt the electors,

These are plain matters of fact, and although I am not in a position to prove them I believe they are true as much as I believe in the Evangelists. 1 consequent-in declining health. Ministerial cries of "l'o. no." Mr. Rymal-Yes, yes. When in declining health it was not beneath the createst of them to refer to him (Mr. Mackenzie) in terms of reproach. But gentlem . opposite might possess their souls in patience. They (the Opposition) had the internal matters of the Liberal party in hand and when they wanted assistence they were not going to the Tory party for it. (Cheers.) Let them run their own machine and let them run it carefully or they would run it among the rocks where they Messrs. Tasse, Weldon, Domville, Mc-Carthy and Mills followed-the latter speaking for nearly two hours-when the vote was taken on Mr. Blake's amondment.
