A year ago on Wednesday week Wm. Donnelly took dinner with his father and mother, and that was the last time he saw his parents alive. He and his sister and his brother Pat sat in the Attorney's office waiting for the verdict. It is natural to suppose that they wished to see the murderers of the family punished. When the verdict was announced and the vulgar cheers of the crowd fell upon the ears of the little party, the young woman fainted away, and as the reporter saw them the boys were bending over her form with tears running down their cheeks. It was sad
