Grand Volunteer Review Windsor, England.

The great Volunteer Review at Wind Park, on Saturday, came off successful British soil since King Edward mare when the Queen and Prince Consort viewed the Volunteers in Hyde Park, th were only 23,000 on the ground; at regiments. England was represented 29 counties, Wales by two-Glamorgan presented by Lord Elcho's old corps of and Ireland by the London Irish, un-Colonel Ward. The War Office mainta ed its prestige for blundering, the spi set apart for field exercises being altoget er too small for handling so large a bo of men. The transport service, too, bro down as usual, and 10,000 men w had neither bit nor sup during the d swore like the French in Flanders. The Queen, escorted by a squadron of the Royal Horse Guards, blue, drove on to the ground at 5 p. m. Her Maj sty was : companied by Prince Leopeld and Princes Beatrice, and attended by a large staff in cluding Sir Garnet Wolsley and Sir Fredric Roberts. In the next carriage came the Princess Louis, attended by Lady Sophil saluting point, the lands, forty five is number, played the National Anthem, and the volunteers drawn up in long lines pre sented arms, while the artillery batteries fired a salute, heard distinctly at Primose

The Duke of Cambridge, who had general charge of the day's work, accupied a point, and with Her Majesty was Prince Christian in the antique garb of the Rangof the Horse Guards. Behind them and along the main pavillion clustered the larg est and most brilliant gathering of lords and ladies ever assembled in England since the old jousting days. The Canadian riflemen new practising son, their commander who won the Prince of Wales' prize at Wimbledon two years ago, was cordially received.

The sun shone out brilliantly as the infantry regiments, headed by the Prince of Wales' corps, began to file past, the officers saluting Her Majesty as they passed, and the bands playing "God Save the Queen," When the last man had passed the salutaand Royal Family drove through them, playing, and the artillery firing a salute. At the close the Queen drove off the grounds, and the Duke of Cambridge on her behalf thanked the commanders. The general appearance of the men was satisfactory, especially the regiments from the northern counties. One man was reported
