Prospective and Retrospective DEANS' HARDWARE STORE, DUNDALK.

On the 31st day of January, 1878, an advertisement, over my own signature, appeared in this newspaper, announcing that I had opened a Hardware Store in the New Town of Dundalk. It was my purpose and desire then, as it has been ever since, to have my business again advertised in the next issue of the "DUNDALK GUIDE."

Notwithstanding this, however, I have persistently refused to appear in a business way, in the columns of a newspaper, until such time as that paper should be a local Journal devoted to the interests of Dundalk itself.

It is just about four years ago, when a friend in Orangeville handed me a copy of the "Dundalk Guide," and the reading of this copy subsequently determined me to settle in this place. The Editorial ability in the paper was such as would find favor in a more pretentious place than Dundalk, and the local contributions were many of them really excellent, and being thus favorably impressed I paid an early visit to Dundalk with a view to settlement.

The Real Estate Agency of A. G. Hunter was then, as now, in full operation. And I learned that all strangers visiting Dundalk made his office the objective point whereby to gain information, as to the Agricultural resources and business prospects of the district.

I accordingly waited upon Mr. Hunter, and found that gentleman busily engaged making and delivering Deeds to parties who were buying or selling lands. He gave me a brief audience and in a few words favored the object I had in view, and encouraged me by saying that he had hitherto bought his Taxes direct from the Manufacturer, but to encourage home institutions he would hereafter place his orders with me. To most people it would seem important to receive the Tax direct from a Real Estate Agent. The Manager is not a man of this kind. He is intolerant of the quackeries which usually pervade the Institutions of a Country Village where the time honored "Lick-horn and the dusty quill" repose in masterly inactivity on the desk; every movement of the man indicates his opposition to this condition of things. If the Country has resources, he is determined to employ every honorable means to secure their development, and through the agency of this man, buyer and seller are brought into contact with each other; and the settlement and development of the country thus accomplished.

His system of advertising is unique; and travel where you will, the eye meets the words "Hunter's Real Estate Agency, New Town of Dundalk." I allude to this matter to show that the Tax trade of a man who makes himself so widely known by means of advertising is by no means an insignificant thing!

There are croakers in every country and in every locality, who stand ready to predict a ruinous result to the undertakings of any one who has the temerity to start anything new. When starting business in Dundalk I met a few individuals of the kind, who did not fail to detail the long list of misfortunes that would certainly befall my mercantile venture in this place. My Scottish origin has however gave me an individuality to carry out a line of action, once it has been determined upon; and in this instance, the wise look; friendly warning, and the grave manner, in no wise disturbed me, I opened the door of my shop and the public did the rest!

A business man can only realize properly his present condition, by comparing it with the past:--During the first year of my business here I sold ten boxes of Axes, Sixty kegs of Nails and four Cross Cut Saws. My Sales of these three articles during the past year have been as follows: Forty boxes of Axes; three hundred and thirty kegs of Nails and thirty Cross Cut Saws. The increased Sale of these enumerated articles may be considered a fair criterion of the advancement of my business from its inception to the present time. The people have supported me well. I am grateful to them for their appreciation of my efforts to give them a Hardware Store such as the locality deserves.

As regards the present Season, I would say I have STOCKED HEAVY. The prosperity of the past four years has enabled me to do so to advantage. Increased facilities for buying, has given me a favorable introduction to manufacturers and afforded me the chance of placing into stock many lines of goods which I had hitherto bought through the ordinary channels of the wholesale trade. Good crops, and the revival of every industry of the country, cannot fail to make the trade of the ensuing Autumn and Winter, at once extensive and desirable; and I do not hesitate to pronounce myself in a position at the present time, to give every advantage to intending purchasers of Hardware.

Before concluding this somewhat lengthy Statement, I would speak a word in reference to the Business of DEANS & McCONACHIE at Badjeros, in the Township of Osprey.

Started nearly a year ago, this Branch is now getting well established, and it is the purpose of my partner and myself to place in Badjeros, at an early date, a Stock of FALL and WINTER Goods that will convince the people of our determination to serve them in the very best way.

Dundalk, September 1st, 1881. JAMES DEANS.
