Therefore, those when drowsiness subsides into a sort cause to enquire whether they can do so light, three or four hours after sunrise and yet consider themselves good citizens, "So much the better," says the fashionable or even entitled to be called gentlemen.

We know good men who have seen much of the world that their ears have become deaf to this horritle vice. Though the house before all the dew is off the disapproing it, they hardly notice it when casually hearing it. To us, however, it is always and only a pain to which we are keenly alive. We have almost a sickening remembrance of hearing Turkish boatmen swearing at each other in English as their waters of the Bay of Alexandria.

A friend of ours once succeeded in presenting this point of its being painful to him and to others to a stage passenger who had been torturing them by his profanity that the offender offered a public and a hearty apology to all present.

We have often spoken kindly and quiet tones to those who were swearing. Almost without exception they have re ceived the reproof in the same spirit in which it was given. The whispered words "Skip the bard words, please," coupled with a kindly glance of the eye, has always compared. We have had this experience among rough men, and sometimes in wild dangerous places. It has thus also been the entering wedge almost as often of word or two of invitation to journey to the better land.

Among the cases of the latter kind which we have in mind was that of a stage-driver or the frontier. We sat beside him on the high seat. The twilight was rapidly deephigh seat. The driver was a kind-hearted, sociable fellow, but there was an intensity and frequency of his utterance of oaths positively unique. We might s y he had a genius for swearing, he was so enthusiastically profane. Our admiration of horses, especially of his splendid "four-in-hand," was genuine, and won the way to his heart. We finally asked him, in an easy, off-hand way, to please oblige us by skipping the hard words. He promptly both thanked Primrose-Wednesday preceeding the Ora us and made apology, cordially volunteering the admission that it was all wrong. Exhibition. The profanity of one of the passengers, who was con siderably under the influence of liquor, was so terrible and wholesale as to cause expressions of pain on the faces of all the ladies within earshot. Words of disappro bation were heard also from both ladia and ventlemen, some of the latter saidsofto voce-"he ought to be put out of the pressed a wish, which we overheard, to know the time of day.
