forming a marriage ceremony. Next morning at sunrise six bronchos stood in minutes the entire party were in the saddle. and puffed up by long bogus certificates p particularly lively brute, which after waltz hotel to the bridge over the fountain. wound up has performance by bucking the clergyman over the railing into the stream. Mr. Smith was rescued, and although not seriously injured, the accident deranged the plans of the wedding party, for the clergyman declined to risk his health by continuing the trip, in spite of all persuasion and the offer of a safe and a quiet an imal. After much consultation, the young suggested that Dr. Smith should come to Colorado Springs, and from the United States telegraph office, which connected with the signal station on the peak, perform the marriage ceremony by telegraph. The doctor consented to this arrangement, and thus, by accident, anoth er element of romance was added to this already romantic affair. The summit was reached about noon.

and Sergeant O'Keefe was found in charge of the station. He received his visitors with his usual hospitality, and, when their intention of celebrating a wedding was an nonneed, was overjoyed, and set about making arrangements. The instrument room of the signal station was decorated with flowers and flags, and then the Sergeant seated himself at the telegraph Springs office, 10,000 feet below. Office Jones, who was in charge, replied and i formed the Sergeant that the Rev. Di Smith had arrived, and was ready to proceed with the ceremony.

The young people joined hands and stood before the Sergeant, the father an mother of the bride standing on either side and the Sargeant at the instrument real off the questions of the elergyman as the came thrilling over the wires. There was a rapid clicking for a moment, and then Sergeant O'Keefe, in a solemu voice, repeated the message: "Charles A. Dutton do you take Nellie J. Tprockmorton to h your lawful wedded wife?" "I do," re spended the bridegroom with evident emotion. The Sergeant tapped the telegraph instrument, and in a moment another message came and was read by him : Nel-He J. Throckmorton, do you take Charle-A. Dutton to be your lawini and wedden busband?" "I do," said the bride in low voice. The Sergeant heard it, how ever, and transmitted the reply. There was a moment's pause, and then came the solemn concluding words. Up from the walley to the small stone keep, 14,000 feet above the ocean came that message mak ing two hearts one; "Then I pronounce
