The Egyptian Crisis and its Origin.

Farly in the present year serious difficult of the Egyptian finances, by whom the government of the country had been substantially monopolized. At that time England and France joined in a note to the Khedive to the effect that they intended to maintain his authority as the only adequate guarantee of order in Egypt. This note exasperated Arabi Bey and the notive leaders who were bent on securing a voice for the Egyptians in the financial adminitration of their own country, and the loca excitement became intense when Cherif Remember the place-a short distance northe Pasha, speaking for the Khedive but really acting under the French and English influeuce, called upon the Egyptian Assembly to surrender its right of action upon the budget. This the assembly refused to do. On the fourth of February Cherif Pasha reand French Governments which led in May to garnest but ineffectual efforts resigned. Then began the trouble. The Khedive received a telegram from the Commandant at Alexandria to the effect that if Arabi were not remstated as Minister of War within twelve hours he could not answer for e public safety of Alexandria. On the receipt of this telegram, the Khe dive sent for the malcontent officers of the Cairo garrison, and informed them that he took the command of the army, ordering Let them call at Dromore in (1991) nineteen ninety- them to confine their troops to barracks and not to make any military dispositions without orders from him. The behaviour of the officers in the presence of the Khe Abdul-al Pasha, turning to Ali Pasha Pehmi, while the Khedive was still speaking, said, "It is evident we can do nothing with this fellow," and turning their backs without salasming. How the Khedive knuckled down, and how he and Arabi kissed and "made friends" is now a matter of history. The massacre which ensued at Alexandria, when Europeans were murdered right and left, while the two fleets lay idle in the barbour, hecause the French Government hesitated to j anthorize its representatives to act, were all due to Arabi's influence and the powerunder the pressure put upon her by Germany and Constantinople, having withdrawn from the joint demonstration When the former Power has demolished Alexandria and overthrown Arabi Bey, it will be in order for Europe to decide what steps shall be taken to "maintain order in Egypt," and then will begin the real work of readjusting the relations of that country not only with the western Powers but with the Sublime Porte. EGYPT'S DEBT TO EUROPE. The debt which Egypt owes to Enropechiefly to England and France-nominally amounts ! to $500,000,000, a very, very large sum for such a country. On Septemi er 1st last it was quoted at almost its full face value, but two weeks ago it had dwindled down to about $375,000,000. Egypt. it must be remembered, has surrendered her right to repudiate this debt, she having given a first mortgage for it on her treasury, which mortgage the Powers have a right to foreclose at any time.
