CHAPTER XVI.

THE BROTHERS.

After leaving Valentine's, he was Verbiere
and Gauvin, and went to a hotel and dined
in a restaurant.

But for the experienced and faithful Menon he never would have succeeded in embarking.

Having left his mother's jewels with Verbiere, he sold his sole forcons consisted of not quite a thousand francs, and with this pocket money in his pocket the murderer of two men, a fugitive from justice, had no money to earn a livelihood, he took passage for Valparaiso.

Before Gaston had been to hotel he had been to a jeweler's shop, and saw that he had come to town.

“I am a fit of sickness, my hair is white, and I am not able to work,” he said.
