worked out the best results. The horse breeder who narrowed his purposes to speed achieved most wonderful results; he went for speed and got it. We are after milk and butter, and shall get it when we keep to rational lines. On the island there are many grades of merit in breeding. Some select the best, and have the best to show for it; others have sought cheaper methods, and, consequently, have inferior stock. Reversion is easier than the acquisition of good qualities; hence, the breeding of poor quality is easiest. The greater the cross the wider the divergence. We found the Guernseys we first received from the island so superior we desired more; then the demand was so great we were tempted to part with many, and sometimes with our best. Moderate-sized herds of Guernseys are, therefore, numerous but large herds rare. Many of the old roads of our breeding are full of deep places, and when we must rebuild let it be upon the macadam plan of good, solid foundation.

Effect of Roots on Soil.

It is well known that when a crop is removed from the soil there is ground a certain proportion of root-material holding her hand, and bidding her goodby which adds so much fertilizing matter to forever! Oh, was ever a poor girl so the soil, according to the kind of crop removed, and much of this material is taken from the soil itself, far down below the reach of the plow, being stored in the plants as well as in the roots. Agriculturists have never fully determined the value of the roots to the soil except in a few cases with certain kinds of plants, such as clover and some of the grasses. The Utah Experiment Station has, however, made a series of experiments | curred near here about 8 o'clock on Thursin this direction which throw considerable day evening, three American soldiers from light on the subject. The cat crop gave 1,888 pounds of roots, the greatest weight being at two and three inches depth, the most being at three inches. The fact that the greatest weight of roots is found at from one to four inches does not indicate that deep plowing is a necessity, and it is probably a surprise to many that the Clover throws all other plants in the shade in proportion to weight of roots for a four-vear-old sod, being 5,630 pounds, and two-year-old clover roots weighed 1,481 pounds. as was supposed, its benefit to the soil being due to the influence of the tubercles in the roots. The preponderance of roots is shown for the majority of crops to be in the upper soil, where they feed, and the INTERESTING NEWS FOR OUR LADY experiment is not favorable to deep plowing, as many of the accepted theories seem cribbing its market value and endurance to be over-thrown. It is, however, a strong point in favor of the rotation of crops, and the result of the experiment will be to lead to radical changes in cultivation.

Here is a recipe obtained direct from a Russian lady for restoring luster to furs. Dwellers in cold climates wear so much fur that their experience in preserving its beauty can not fail to be useful. Heat a quantity of rye flour as hot as the hand can bear. Spread a sheet upon the floor, lay the fur to be dressed upon it, cover the garment with the long-haired brush. It will take some time to remove all the rye, but this trouble will be repaid by the improved appearance of the fur. Coarsely ground meal probably would answer if rye flour is not obtainable. Bran is more easily dealt with, but its efficacy as a restorer would probably be inferior to that of flour.
