Some dyin' wives wouldn't think of these things, but that's my way. You orter hev that dish-pan nended right away arter the funeral and I was goin' to tell you that the snout had come off the teapot. Shall you go to the first circus that comes along, Samuel, or will you wait about three months and then go to a horse-race or a dog-fight ?" Mr. Gallup didn't say. He turned over on his side with a wheeze and a grunt, Mrs. Gallup found her eyes closing as she waited for him. She wasn't through yet, nowever, and she pulled her nose to drive sleep away and said :

"If I'm summoned I don't want to hold back, and if the Lord wants me to become an angel I'm not going to dispute over it, but I do wish angels had sunthin' to do besides flyin' around and playin' on golden harps. I know I'll feel hinder lonesome up there not to wash on Monday and bake I'll want to make soft soap and gather catnip and smartweed. However, I suppose I'll get used to it in time. Samuel, don't you want to turn over and hold my hands while my speerit leaves this mold of clay?"

Nothing from Mr. Gallup—nothing but evidence that it would take the report of a cannon to wake him.

"Very well, Samuel-very well!" said Mrs. Gallup as she hitched nerself down in the bed. "I kin die alone as well as if a dozen people were around, and you can't say I made you any trouble over it.
