A NEW TREADLE BOAT.
Don Ramon Barca, of Spain, invents a Novelty in Water Cycling.
Our illustration represents the latest development in water cycling, which is proving very popular in some of the large parks of Germany. Treadle boats are not of such very recent invention, but the peculiar construction of this latest contrivance and rapidity of motion which it affords is entirely new.

First of all, the new design is not in the shape of a boat, and does not admit of the carrying of passengers. The machinery is just above the surface of the water, only the wheels come partly beneath it.
The position of the man in the boat is exactly like that of the rider on his bicycle.
The weight of the entire apparatus does not exceed fifty kilograms. It is asserted that on the lake on one of these machines is exceedingly pleasant and exhilarating, and is much more weather more than ten miles can be covered in an hour.
The inventor is Don Ramon Barca, of Madrid, Spain.

Poison on Bank Notes.
A bank cashier of Vienna recently died from the effects of touching his lips with his fingers when counting money. At an examination of the vaults it fell to his lot to count a large number of small bills, and he was so much affected by the poison mechanically to touch his lips with his fingers became dry. That evening he felt a smarting pain in his lip, but did not attend to it until a swelling had set in the next day. He then consulted a surgeon, who instilled upon an immediate operation on the tumor that had in the meantime assumed alarming proportions. But in spite of the operation, the patient died three days after of blood poisoning.

STORIES OF ADVENTURE.

It was a small room, scantily furnished, with the same marks of neglect and decay which met us at every turn. The walls were hung with discoloured tapestry which had come loose at one corner, so as to expose the rough stone-work behind. A second door, hung with a curtain, faced us upon the other side. Between lay a square table, strewn with dirty dishes and the sordid remains of a meal. Several bottles were scattered over it. At the head of it, and facing us, there sat a huge man, with a lion-like head and a great shock of orange-glaring hair. He looked at us with a haughty, haughty and tangled and coarse as a horse's mane. I have seen some strange faces in my time, but never one more brutal than that, with its small, vicious, blue eyes, its white, crumpled cheeks, and its thick, hanging lip which protruded over his mouth. He looked at us with a haughty, haughty and tangled and coarse as a horse's mane. Yet he was not so drunk but that our uniforms carried their message to him.

"Well, my brave boys," he blurted out,
"What is the latest news from Paris, eh?
You are going to France, I hear, and have meantime all become slaves yourselves—slaves to a little aristocrat, or a big No more citizens either, I am told, and nothing but monsieur and madame. My friend, some of these boys will have to go into the sawdust basket of these morning's."

Duroc advanced in silence, and stood by the villain's side.
"Jean Carabin," said he, "the film of drunkenness seemed to be clearing from his eyes."
"Jean Carabin," said Duroc, once more.
He sat up and grasped the arm of his chair.
"What do you mean by repeating that name, young man?" he asked.
"Jean Carabin, you are a man whom I have long had to meet."
"Supposing that I once had such a name how can it concern you, since you must have known it when I bore it?"
"My name is Duroc."
"Not the son of—"
"The son of the man you murdered."
"The Baron tried to laugh, but there was terror in his eyes."
"We must let bygones be bygones, young man. Do not let us be reminded of them in these days: the aristocrats or the people. Your father was of the Girondo circle. He held out a red twitching hand as he spoke.
"Enough," said young Duroc. "I will not sit in your chair through you as you sit in mine. I should do as you do, and right. I disfigure my blade by crossing it with yours. And yet you are a Frenchman, and have even held a commission under the same flag as myself. Rise, then and defend your name."
"You are not suggesting something?" he cried, in despair. "Ah, what is that?
There had been a woman behind a little window, and a shadow came between the stars and ourselves. A small, white hand was stretched into the room, and a "Quick! quick!" cried a woman's voice.
"We were on the barrel in an instant."
"You have sent for the Cossack."
"Your lives are at stake. Ah, I am lost!"
"There was the sound of rushing steps, horse chaise, a blow, and the stars were before his eyes. He fell, and he was between us in an instant, and it was only the shaking crumpled which told us witness she had come.
"I have seen it, all," she cried. "Oh, sir, you have carried yourself splendidly!" She stooped to his companion and kissed his eyes and again ere he could dismissage it from her grasp.
"My name, my name, my name, my name, my name!" he cried.
"Because it is the hand which struck him on the face, lying motionless. Because it may be the hand which will avenge my mother. I am his mother. I am his mother.
I love him, I love him. Ah, my mother, his his step." In an instant she was standing as steadily as she had done. A moment later, the Baron entered with a drawn sword in his hand, and the fellow who had admitted us to his bedroom.
"This is my secretary," said he. "He will be my friend in this affair. But we shall need more show than that we can find here. Perhaps you will kindly come with me to a more spacious apartment." It was evidently impossible to fight in a chamber which was blocked by a great table. We followed him out, therefore, into the dining-hall. At the farther end and slight was shining through an open door.
"He shall find what we want in here," said the man with the dark beard. "It was a large, empty room, with rows of barrels and cases round the walls. A strong light came from a shaft in the corner. The floor was level and true, so that a swordsman could walk on it. Duroc stood back with a bow and motioned me to follow my companion. Hardly had the heavy door crashed behind us and the key screamed in the lock. We were taken in a trap.
For a moment we could not realize it.
Such incredible scenes was outside all our experiences. Then, as we understood the sound of our blows and our own strength, it was no light task, for many of them were large and heavy. On we went, working like madmen. After all this we had been sent to us for a
