

MYSTERIOUS CONTINENT.

IS THE NORTH POLE REGION INHABITED AND BY WHOM?

What is the North Pole like? It is situated on land; that seems to be almost a certainty. There is land here of ice in that part of the world and clear water too. Good and scientific reasons the back of these assumptions. That the region in question is inhabited by various animals is an undisputed fact. It can not be asserted with human confidence that human beings do not live there.

It is known that several species of birds live and breed in regions so far to the north of any point as yet reached by explorers. They even migrate to the north pole, their flocks vanishing into the unknown beyond. Obviously, they cannot lay their eggs or rear their young on ice floes or bergs, and so it must be taken for granted that they find their food suitable for the purpose. The rosy gull, most beautiful of all its fleet-winged tribe, spends summer and winter within the mysterious and unexplored area. A species is known to exist in that area, only occasional specimens being seen outside of it, driven to the southward by storms. Only once has a flock of rosy gulls been seen: it passed Point Barrow, Alaska, in the month of August.

There must be no small extent of land in a region that exclusively maintains a whole species of animals. Open water there must be all the year around, else the rosy gulls would starve. Doubtless the birds skirt the ice fields in winter, looking for fish. Two species of swallows breed in the unexplored area. The same may be said of at least one species of goose. Every flying creature seen from Point Barrow, flying northward, whether no human being has yet been able to follow.

If there be a polar continent, there is no reason for picturing it as devoid of animal or vegetable life. In its surrounding waters are PLENTY OF FISHES. Doubtless, as well as numerous species of crustaceans; in its bays seals disport themselves perhaps, and possibly walrus are not absent. As for the flora, there is apt to be as much of it as is found on Spitzbergen, that is, a soil of mosses and lichens, with even a few flowering plants, such as the yellow arctic poppy.

The most interesting question about the north pole is whether or not it is a matter of self-defense, to require all intending passengers from American, English or Arctic parties to provide themselves with medical certificates showing that they are neither consumptive nor exhibit any tendencies as being so affected.

LUMINOUS GUNSHOOT. A luminous firelight for use in a bad light with guns of various kinds has been patented in England. A tiny incandescent lamp, supplied with current from a simple form of battery concealed in the stock, is mounted within a shield at the muzzle of the gun, and a faint ray of light, calculated to indicate the position of its source, is exposed in the direction of the shooter's eye, and thus enables him to aim to obtain the required alignment with the light sight and with the target, be it animal or human, without the slightest application of the sight as for game shooting at night. The device is simple, such, for instance, as the illumination of a machine gun used against torpedo boats, or against the Arctic whaling service. The event he describes occurred in the winter of 1894, which he spent at Point Barrow.

There is an Eskimau village at Point Barrow, and also a whaling station. One day there was a great commotion and the Eskimau declared positively that the three men were not of their people. Their dress and actions made this a certainty, and exclaimed in a very decided way. "You are a fool yourself; I'm no fool!" He rubbed off the stage, and could not be induced to return.

About the only use to which his mathematical abilities have been put has been an order as to prevent him from aiding those who make queer offers in this regard. One day he wandered into the street, and he was asked to give an order as to prevent him from aiding those who make queer offers in this regard. Without a gun. Now, the Eskimau are proverbial for their hospitality and amiable inclination towards strangers, and they were astonished when the three men took refuge on their icebergs. They ran away from the ice to the northward. This was what had caused the excitement. The Eskimau declared positively that the three men were not of their people. HORRORS OF THE RED SEA.

THE REGION WHERE THE ITALIANS ARE OPERATING.

The Hottest and Most Desolate Country on the Globe—Red Sea Towns and their Peculiarities—The Most Singular Body of Water in the World.

The Red Sea has the best-deserved reputation of being the hottest part of the earth. During the coldest months of the year, from December to March, the temperature at Massowah averages 89 degrees, while during July and August the average temperature, day and night, is 100, while, when the sun blows, as it sometimes does for weeks at a time, the mercury has been known to rise to 132, and stay at that point for many hours. Nor is the heat the only evil to be endured at such times, for the simoon brings with it clouds of dust which stings the face and breaths it. When the approach of this dreaded wind is felt, the people of Massowah, Jiddah and other Red Sea cities close their stores and houses, and shut themselves up in their houses, stopping every angry gust of the fine sand of the desert. The sensation being so sharp up in a closed house at such a temperature is described by Europeans as resembling imprisonment in a hot stove, but it is the only chance for life, for nothing can live in the terrible sand storm.

It may readily be imagined from this one fact that life in a Red Sea port has many drawbacks, and that it is not along the sea are looked upon only as stopping places on the road to the interior. Jiddah, the port of Mecca, is the most important, as every year many thousands of pilgrims from India, Siam, China, Persia and Africa, land there on their way to the holy places of Islam. For hundreds of years, the regulation mode of travel was by caravan, but since the English commerce spread over the Orient,

PILGRIM SHIPS regularly sail from India and Persia to Jiddah and the inconveniences and delays of a long land journey are thus avoided. On the opposite side of the Red Sea, the gate to Abyssinia.

Much has been written about this place since the Italian occupation, but little is really known by the reading public. The town was situated on a coral island, close to the shore, but during the last few years, the sea has advanced, and the town is now a mere island, and the population that it possessed twenty years ago. At best, it is a miserable place to live in, and the Italian army of occupation has been supplied with water from a spring on the island.

Princess Beatrice. Princess Henry—or Princess Beatrice, as the English people still call her—is in her 39th year. She has always been known as the most accomplished musician of the royal family. When quite young she developed a wonderful gift of reading difficult music at sight, and this has been carefully cultivated. She is also a most graceful composer, and has set to music various poems by Lord Tennyson, and these were heard at the great concert given the year before last as a memorial of the late poet laureate.

GHASTLY EXPERIENCES.

A COLLEGE PROFESSOR CHASED BY A DEAD SOLDIER.

Knock-Down Blow Dealt a Student by a College Professor Chased by a Dead Soldier—A Corpse-Carrier Drives In upon a Street—A Dead Soldier.

At a gathering of physicians some interesting experiences were detailed. "Shortly after receiving my diploma," remarked an elderly doctor, "I accepted the position of Assistant Demonstrator of Anatomy at the University of—, in Prussia. Just about this time it seemed to be the fad for soldiers to terminate their earthly lives by filling the barrels of their guns with water and discharging the same through the roof of their heads, thereby blowing off the top of their heads. One stormy morning, one of these suicides was brought to the Anatomical Department of the University, and he was, indeed, a splendid specimen of manhood. As this method of shortening the carter's life offers an excellent opportunity for securing the labyrinth of the internal ear, I cut the body in two and had the upper half removed to my private office, which I had just fitted up with the latest appliances. The evening of my usual custom, I remained with the students in the dissecting room until after midnight, when the last one departed. As a thunder-storm was raging without I remained in my private office, so once repaired to my room to get some anatomical investigations. I had been at work for about an hour when I heard a noise in the street, and a faint cry of 'Water!' reached me. I glanced in the direction whence it came, and, seeing nothing but cadavers and various parts of the human skeleton, knew that the cry was 'Water!'

From that part of the room, and, thinking it a frank imagination, once more turned to the task before me. "Water!" this time it was plain, and I looked in the direction and saw nothing but the mutilated face of a soldier, who had just fallen from the roof of the dissecting room, and was lying on the floor. I was also fastened. On came the grim specter, and, brandishing a sword, he rushed at me. I was in a state of panic, and, when my lamp was upset and we were in darkness, I heard a harsh cry, and, when I awoke, I found myself returned the janitor was by my side and explained that one of the students, who had been in the dissecting room, had fallen from the roof of the dissecting room, and was lying on the floor.
