Of course it is quite impossible to hide from Clarissa Peyton that everything is going wrong at Sartoris. Georgie's pale unsmiling face (so different from that of old,) and Dorian's evident determination to absent himself from all society, tell their own tale.

She has, of course, heard of the uncomfortable gossip that has connected Ruth Annersley's mysterious disappearance with Dorian, but - stanch friend as she is-has laughed to scorn all such insinuations; that Georgie can Articles. believe them, puzzles her more than she has fought against the thought that has fought against the thought that over the Ten Commandments. All is Dorian's wife can think aught bad of gloom! Clarissa is rather delighted

To-day, Georgie, who is now always feverishly restless, tells herself she will go up to Gowran and see Clarissa.
