

Newspaper Laws.

We call the special attention of Post-masters and Superintendents of Post-offices to the following:

1. If any person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount whether it be taken from the office or not.

There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

2. Any person who takes a paper from the post office, whether directed to him or another, or whether he has subscribed to it, must pay the postmaster.

3. If a subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time, and the publisher continues to send, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post-office. This proceeds upon the ground that a man must pay for what he uses.

CHAPTER XXXI.

"One was doth tread upon another's heel, so fast they follow."—Hamlet.

"One that was a woman, sir,"—Hamlet.

Across the autumn grass, that has lowed beneath the searching sun, her eyes, and in the full sun, shines, comes James Scrope.

Through the woods, under the dying beeches, that lead to Gowran, he saunters slowly, thinking only of the girl beyond, who is not thinking of him at all, but of the man in his soul. Sir James believes utterly unworthy of her.

This thought so engrossed him, as he walks along, that he fails to hear Mrs. Branscombe, until she has passed him, and until he says gently:

"How dye do, Sir James?" At this his start is so visible that she laughs and says, with a faint blush:

"What is my coming so light that one fails to hear it?"

To which he, recovering himself, makes ready response:

"So light a foot."

Leaving the library at Sartoris, he finds Duran there, alone, indeed, and comfortless, and sore at heart.

"I have twenty pounds," says Sir James, "and I am required to pay it off."

Scrope, who is feeling very sorry for him, explains matters, while Dorian, a determined silence.

"If you will let me go, I will pay it off at once," says Sir James, who would like to insult two guards. I always knew how it would end."

"Well, and how has it ended?" says Sir James, with a weak effort to retrieve his position, putting on a small pugnacious smile.

"I don't think to deceive me," says Miss Scrope, in a fiery tone, whereupon Sir James reflects the meaning of words Miss Scrope's match is yet to be found.

"I am a man of honour," says Sir James, "and I have been a man of honour."

"I am a woman of honour," says Sir James, "and I have been a woman of honour."

"I am a man of honour," says Sir James, "and I have been a man of honour."
