THE GLOBE & REVIEW.

For three months a lively interest will be taken in public affairs. A session of the Dominion Parliament comes shortly after the elections. Everyone should keep posted on National and Local matters, and to do this no better way can be found than by keeping close to the W. Globe and the Review. We furnish both 3 months for 30c. to any address in Canada or the States. The Globe is one of the first and the fairest papers in Canada, and the REVIEW, while believing in and advocating Liberal principles as necessary for the welfare of the great producing classes of this country, will still as a newspaper cannot call itself a party paper. If you cannot call send stamps or send your name anyway. The campaign is just opening. Secure it all.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

SOME GOOD ADVICE TO MOTHERS UPON A VITAL SUBJECT.

Hints to Women Bathers—Justice for the Summer Girl—Women and the Supreme Court—Mary Hallock Foote—Changed Dresses at the Races.

There are many parents who seem to have no realizing sense whatever of the proper diet for children. They give them whatever they happen to have at hand, or what is much to the same purpose, anything they cry for. The infant mortality of the country is something awful, when one considers it. Hundreds of thousands of children die every year, many of them from the effects of injudicious feeding alone.

In hot weather children should be carefully watched and never permitted to touch articles of food that are at all questionable. A little perfectly ripe fruit, either with a little gruel or other suitable diet, should be given. If a child is at all delicate or the digestion seems to be at fault, cooked fruit may be given. This is eminently safe and always reliable. Use as little sugar as may be in order to render the same palatable, and carefully select the kind to be given. Cooked strawberries and blackberries, with the seeds strained out, are excellent and may be eaten freely. Raspberries are usually safe to give without cooking, provided they are perfectly ripe and thoroughly washed. Very acid fruits are not to be given to young children. The reason for this is that, being largely on a milk diet, the acid in the fruit makes a thick, tough curd in the stomach, which, in many cases, it is impossible to digest. Oranges disagree with a great many persons, and although they are almost universally recommended for children the utmost care should be observed as to whether they disagree, for there is probably no form of indigestion so distressing as that produced by oranges. Pineapple has upon some persons a somewhat similar effect, only usually less severe.

There are many persons who are opposed to the use of meats, especially in hot weather. It is, however, safe to say that properly made soups and a small bit of well cooked meat cut into tiny shreds and thoroughly masticated can do no harm to delicate children and often produce the happiest results.

There is in many vegetables an element that, in itself harmless when it exists in the digestive organs in any quantity yet furnishes nutriment for a deadly germ. This germ will not flourish unless this substance is present. Vegetables of various sorts are specially productive of this element; therefore the best authorities on cholera and kindred diseases have found it necessary to restrict the use of certain vegetables in extremely hot weather. Whatever is given, however, must be thoroughly cooked and should be kept as completely excluded from outside air as possible. If children are feverish, cross and unmanageable, it is well to try a diet of gluten bread and carefully prepared broth or soup. The meat should be perfectly fresh and cooked a long time. Vegetables may be added, but should be strained out before the soup is served. Milk, if there is any doubt about it whatever, should be sterilized before using. All utensils used for cooking children's food ought to receive the most rigid inspection, and no question should be allowed as to their perfect cleanliness. Few people realize that a dish of milk standing in a tainted icebox may in a few hours collect disease germs enough to poison an entire family, and, while the robust constitutions of adults may be able to resist the poison, delicate children succumb to it.

It is not necessary that a child's diet be extremely varied. It is much better to restrict it during the hot season to certain articles that are known to be easy of digestion and to make dietetic experiments at other seasons of the year if they are made at all.—New York
