It is accessible only by one gorge in the moun- modern Kings of Greece. He was detain, and this narrow pass has been, and can be again, defended against an army of Turks by a regiment of Greeks. The stripes in the Greek flag are blue and white, the blue suggestive of the azure sky and water which environ Hellas, the white typical of the glistening marbles of which her shrines For centuries after a temporary reare built, and of the pure and stainless lilies which blossom in the fields of the fertile Morea. I recently saw in the audience chamber of the palace at Athens this historic flag, now battle stained and bloody, which Germanos flaunted at Megaspelion 76 years ago. This flag is now borne by the regiment of the Crown Prince Constantin should lead a revolt.

THE FACTS IN THE CAST. Fully justify Germanos in his action. The Suliotes, whose country can be seen from the mountain near Patras, had been fighting the Turks 13 years, winsuperior numbers. The secret society of the Hetaria was then in its infancy, but encouraged by the brilliant exploits of Marcos Bozzaris, the commander of the Suliotes, Ipselanti, a petty Greek leader of the Morea, undertook to arouse the members of the league and make the revolution general. All Pasha heard of it and ordered that the primates of the Greek Church and Bishops of the Morea should be sent to Tripolitza and held as hostages until the Hetaria should disband and lay down arms. Archbishop Germanos was then near Megaspelion. He designed the national standard, had one made, flung it to the breeze and called on every Greek in "the name of God and liberty" to take up arms and defend it against the Moslem crescent! The response to his call was instantaneous. Megaspelion was attacked by a large army of Turks. For several days they tried in vain to pass the narrow gorge.
