The new Parliament building is a superb edifice in brown stone, and is what is known as "Neo-Grecian" style, and altogether different from any other public building in Canada. The total cost was barely a million and a half dollars, yet the effect, both within and without, is infinitely more impressive and sumptuous than the egregious Capitol at Albany, which cost upwards of $2,000,000. The frescoes and decorations of the interior, particularly that of the Legislative Chamber, which is fitted up for ninety-four members, each granted $600 as a sessional allowance, are worth travelling a long way to see.
