

HARDY OUT OF POLITICS.

At Hamilton on Labor Day Premier Hardy made an important speech showing that he is a broad minded man, and conversant with economic questions, he said:

It was pleasant for a politician to go among his fellow men, not vote seeking but simply to talk plain English to them, when a man might speak his own mind, and where, if he had opinions on the labor or any other question incidental to it, he might express them.

There was no time to deal with the philosophy and learning of the labor question, but a few remarks upon it of a plain and practical character, touching the requirements and achievements of the movement, what had been done and what might be done, what the labor leaders of the Province were looking forward to, might be offered without attempting to deal with the flight of fancy or the products of the imagination. If he were to adopt a text he would say that "Labor exalts a nation," and he would proceed to speak from that standpoint, because in Canada all men who expected success must work. We had no room for the idler, indeed we had scarcely room for the man of leisure.

He joined with the eloquent advocate of labor, Mr. Clarke, whose life was identified with the movement, in congratulating the labor organizations of the country upon the achievement of labor day. It was a solid gain, a recognition of labor and labor organizations. It was more than a recognition of mere broken and fragmentary labor it was a recognition of the union of the forces, moral, physical and political, which had led Parliament to dedicate a day to the holy cause of labor and set it apart for all time to come—the same as New Year's Christmas and all the great landmarks of time around which cluster our interests and affections.

The cause of labor was a great cause. Perhaps in the civilized world there was no one cause greater than the cause of labor. It was the cause of humanity; it was founded on humanity, was exalted as humanity rose, and as humanity fluctuated, ebbed and flowed, just so did the cause of labor ebb and flow.

In closing Mr. Hardy said: The labor cause and its advancement owe much to the great principle which underlies society, the principle of evolution. The cause had advanced slowly but firmly in such a way that it could hardly be recognized, but from decade to decade and from quarter century to quarter century there could be seen great landmarks indicating advance: great landmarks showing that the great body of the people were rising to the occasion and that they were advancing in material welfare. No historian could point to the exact time when this forward movement began and no one could say where it would end.

The Premier concluded an excellent speech by a condemnation of the arbitrary and tyrannical laws which have recently been passed in the United States. He trusted that we should survive them, and he added that he was happy and proud to believe that there was no cause in this country for the terrible discontent that pervaded the workmen of the United States.

HORTICULTURAL.

A Pleasing Exhibit.

On Monday afternoon and evening last, thanks to the efforts of the Directors and Secy., and many sympathetic members of the Horticultural Society a floral exhibit was made in the Town Hall which surprised even the greatest enthusiasts in our midst. "Well done, Durham," "Who would think Durham could show this," "Isn't it lovely," "It's just splendid," were some of the expressions used to faintly express the delighted feelings of the onlookers.

We have heard many regrets from those who were unable to be present, those who forgot! and from those who didn't know! and it is certain that if anything of the kind is again attempted, a rush may be expected.

Mr. Gorsline, Mr. Firth, Mr. Arrow-smith and Mr. Thos. Brown were some of the chief workers, and they had a busy day of it collecting, and their labors were rewarded by the splendid exhibit. Perhaps with so much to do it was to be expected that some would be overlooked, but it was unfortunate, that some who had cut their best flowers by request should be forgotten in the collection. Next time a better system will prevent this little mistake.

Shall we attempt it? To describe the scene? Likely to be a failure, and our own account of necessity, must be brief, the limitations being the abundance of our botanical ignorance.

A platform, about 14 feet wide was improvised on the top of the seats in the centre of the hall, and every part of this was covered with forms of beauty. Along the centre was ranged the larger plants forming the background of the banks of flowers on all sides. In front and nearest the spectators were bouquets of cut flowers arranged with effectiveness as to color and variety. Here were found rich hued dahlias, beautiful asters and petunias and the sweetest of sweet peas. Some modest ferns interspersed, were suggestive in their green beauty of the coolness of their native home, as the evening was a warm one.

Geraniums were a large display and some brilliant specimens were seen, though one or two would stand some pruning to advantage. The tender drooping fuchsia hung gracefully, the gaily gladioli glared their gladness and made the fiery cockscombs blush the deeper. Variegated phlox Drummond made a bewitching display and the tuberos begonias captured all eyes.

Over all this waved the fronds of the feathery palms, 5 kinds of which came from the greenhouse of Mr. Kelly. At each end of the centre row stood on guard large specimens of the harsh yet curious cactus, while were seen, first time for many, specimens of cactus grating, done by naturalist Firth. A protusion of "rat tails" grew out of a—a corn cob variety, and other fantastic specimens of the spiny tropical plant were there.

Of curios there was no lack. Here was the Norfolk Island pine, almost like our balsam, the Australian silk oak, whose slender form did not suggest the ruggedness with which we associate the oak, a ginger plant, a banana tree doing well far from home, plants called dracena and acalthea and the fleshy leaved rubber plant, all being supplied by that enthusiastic florist Mr. Kelly. Mr. Thos. Brown showed a lemon tree 22 years old, which, two years ago, had undergone a life and death struggle with king frost but was victorious; he had also a tobacco plant. Mr. Gorsline, Mr. Mockler, Mrs. A. S. Hunter, Miss Mockler were other prominent exhibitors.

Mrs. Neil McKechnie had a tuberosus begonia which was much admired.

A vase of white and purple asters on the north side was a harmonious blending.

Mrs. A. S. Hunter's petunias were very large white and variegated specimens. Her French marigolds were splendid double varieties.

The hand delighted the ear while the senses of sight and smell were being gratified.

Didn't you feel like plucking these geraniums?

What are you going to try for next year?

Mr. Gorsline supplied some beautiful foliage plants.

A bunch of roses in bloom were shown by Mr. Mockler.

Miss Park had a rare specimen of lily.

Miss Wright contributed some fine geraniums.

Many specimens of plants from seeds supplied by the Society were shown.

Good Blood

Is essential to health. Every nook and corner of the system is reached by the blood, and on its quality the condition of every organ depends. Good blood means strong nerves, good digestion, robust health. Impure blood means scrofula, dyspepsia, rheumatism, catarrh or other diseases. The surest way to have good blood is to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, and sends the elements of health and strength to every nerve, organ and tissue. It creates a good appetite, gives refreshing sleep and cures that tired feeling. Remember,

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Hood's Pills take, easy to operate. See cure Liver Ills; easy to cure.
