Romance of a Roman Queen

Cornelia, the daughter of Cinna, was found sitting in a chair dead, her eyes wide open looking toward the sky, filled with a look of horror, her hands upheld as if to ward off a blow or push from view some awful object. In her lap lay a parchment letter signed Julius Cinnero, who was then in Spain, saying, although he loved her best, he had decided it was better for him wed one who had more money than she.

It must have broken the girl's heart, for there was no sign of disease or pain. On a couch in the Trinculinium of Pansas' house in Herculaneum, Pompias Dolabella, the Roman senator, lay dying, beside him an imperial soldier, and in a shadow his old and faithful nurse. Suddenly he said to the soldier: "Tell Julius Cinnero that I forged the letter to Cornelia, the daughter of Cinna-ask him to forgive me if he canfor I was as false to him as-" The lamp gave a vicious sputter and went out, leaving a snaky coil of greenish smoke.

In the Forum the Romans wept as M. Tullus Cicero pronounced an oration lauding the good and virtuous senator's life.

With the first blush of spring Julius Cinnero, the proprietor of Father Spain turned his steps toward Rome to reseive from the emperor's hand a civic

THE BELOVED PHYSICIAN.

Some Incidents in the Life of Sir James

Simpson, of Edinburgh. Since the days of Sir Walter Scott, perhaps no Scotsman has commanded more loyal and universal affection from all grades of people than James Simpson, who first used chloroform as an anaesthetic. When a title came to him, late in life, he took for his crest the healing rod of Aesculapius and for his motto "Victo Dolore." What man could have a prouder?

He gave advice free of all thought of recompense to those who could not afford a fee, but was too honest to encourage those who had no need of his skill to spend their money uselessly. "I'll see you in Princes street," he said to one patient of this description. 'Take a walk there, daily, in the sun," The lady was at first indignant at the doctor's hard-heartedness, but finally took his advice and was cured.

It was sometimes difficult to get audience with him. The importunity of the great availed nothing against of larvae impossible; that a handful of the sturdiness of the unyielding janit- permanganate will oxidize a ten-acre ors. A well-known author was once told that no more patients were to be seen on that day. "But I am sure I with care a whole State may be kept may be admitted," she urged; "he knows me."

"Doctor Simpson knows the queen, ma'am," was the rejoinder, and the door closed on the discomfited lady.

How the Nuisance May Be Easily Abated. The summer months will soon be upon us, and it behooves us to equip ourselves in a manner to meet the discomforts of the season with patience and grace, and in so far as we can escape them. One of the most annoying features of the latter months of the summer along the banks of rivers and on the sea coast, is the mosquito, and anything helping us to abate the nuisance is important, Apropos to the subject says the Monthly Retrospect, a recent number of The Public Health Journal observes:

"Two and one-half hours are required for a mosquito to develop from its first stage, a speck resembling cholera bacteria, to its active and venomous maturity. The insect in all its phases may be instantly killed by contact with minute quantities of permanganate of potash. It is claimed that one part of this substance in 1,500 of solution distributed in mosquito marshes will render the development swamp, kill its embryo insects and keep it free from organic matter for thirty days at a cost of 25 cents; that free of insect pests at a small cost.
