Like the house of the foolish man of Biblical lore which was builded upon the sand, it piles looking for the hole he had got literally slid into the water when the in by earthquake shock came.

Previous to that fateful seventh day of June, 1692, Port Royal had been known as "the finest town in the a timid fish to do. I myself have seen come back in the steerage. world." It was, as it now is, a British colony, but there was little either in its government or its customs of British morality. We are told that it was a place of luxurious debauchery; that in their excesses the colonists rivalled the profligates of ancient Rome.

Buccaneering and piracy were recognized industries. The treasure ships of Spain were legitimate prey. The riches of Mexico and Peru were levied upon and the people of Jamaica were literally rolling in wealth and splendor. Vice and debauchery held sway. And like the crack of doom came the earthquake. The thunder of the elements sounded in the ears of the heedless revellers. The earth opened in great fissures, and closed again like the jaws of a mighty trap. And in closing it gripped many of its victims in the middle, leaving their hands above ground. Then came the awful sliding, grinding noise, as the city, built upon its foundation of sand, eank into the caressing embrace of the sea, which forever closed upon its wickedness and will forever keep its dread satisfied to know a good many things

TALENTED GREAT LADIES.

The Princess of Wales is an artist in water colours whose works are very ent. I saw two of them last week at grave square. Both looked as if they Norfolk. They were exquisitely fresh in colour, bold in treatment, and yet well finished, and with none of the uncertainty that so often mars the work of an amateur. I am sure if the Princess of Wales wanted to earn her living she would only have to set up a studio as a water-colour artist.
