Three part TV series on aging produced by professors at WLU

A three-part television series for those nearing or in retirement, titled: Aging--problems and possibilities, has been prepared by faculty members at Wilfrid Laurier University.

The series will be seen on Grand River cable television beginning this Thursday, Nov. 18, at 7:30 p.m. and at the same time on the following two Thursday evenings. Programs are repeated the day following at 3:30 p.m.

Dr. Brant Bonner, professor-emeritus of business, discusses job opportunities overseas for retired volunteers in the first program. Dr. Bonner has just returned from a teaching assignment in Ghana.

On Nov. 25 Prof. Barbara Cowan, a member of the WLU social work faculty, looks at some of the social problems facing retirees. The final discussion, with Prof. Ralph Blackmore, a WLU economist, delves into financial realities for older persons.

Host for the series is Richard K. Taylor, WLU information director, sitting in for Lorne Shantz, regular host for the Senior Citizens program on Grand River TV.
